HISTORICAL

The CENTURY was founded, and its first Constitution adopted, January 13, 1847. One hundred gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters and the Fine Arts had been invited to join in forming the Association, of which number forty-two accepted the invitation and became Founders. Forty-six others joined during the year.

The name, suggested by the number originally invited to be members, was the proposal of Edgar S. Van Winkle.

On March 7, 1857, it was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, which was amended March 29, 1883.

From the spring of 1847 to the spring of 1849 it occupied rooms at No. 495 Broadway.

From the spring of 1849 to the spring of 1850 it occupied rooms at No. 435 Broome Street.

From the spring of 1850 to May, 1852, it occupied rooms at No. 575 Broadway.

From May, 1852, to the spring of 1857, it occupied the house at No. 24 Clinton Place (now No. 46 East 8th Street).

From the spring of 1857 to January 5, 1891, it occupied the house at No. 109 (old No. 42) East Fifteenth Street.

On January 10, 1891 it removed to its present club-house, No. 7 West Forty-third Street.

Successive amendments to the Constitution fixed the limit of resident membership as follows: March 5, 1853, 200 members; March 7, 1857, 250; May 7, 1859, 350; February 1, 1862, 400; April 7, 1866, 500; February 6, 1875, 600; December 5, 1885, 700; May 3, 1890, 800; February 6, 1892, 1000. The limit of non-resident membership has been fixed as follows: February 6, 1892, 300; December 3, 1921, 400; January 14, 1928, 500; June 3, 1941, 600; March 1, 1945, 700.

On May 4, 1901, John Bigelow and Parke Godwin, only surviving members of The Column, a literary society founded in 1825, presented to The Century the privileges of fellow-membership with them. The silver memorial column bears a lamp which since 1858 had burned at every meeting of The Column and is now lighted at each gathering of The Century.

FROM THE HOUSE COMMITTEE

THE COMMITTEE has had a rather uneventful year. The Clubhouse activities for which the Committee was responsible appear to have satisfied in every respect all but an infinitesimally small percentage of our membership. The volume of business and the income from house charges increased above those of 1955. Voluntary contributions from the members helped to put the Association in fairly good financial condition.

During the year the price of the Ordinary Dinner was increased from $3.00 to $3.50. Luncheon prices and à la carte prices were likewise adjusted upward.

The Committee voted to resume the custom of Fortnightly Dinners, the first one to be in January, 1957. Discussions were held by the Committee concerning the method of seating at the Monthly Dinners, but as of the year's end no definite conclusions had been reached.

Routine repairs were made to the Clubhouse as needed during the year. The west wall of the building was completely waterproofed.

Gifts to the Association during the year, which the House Committee acknowledges with gratitude, included: corn from Frank Courtney Nicodemus, Jr., salmon from Edward P. Childs, trout from Edward Ridley Finch, maple syrup from Walter H. Kilham, Jr., flowers from Stuart W. Jackson, wooden fish platter from Frank L. Babbott, highboy desk from William Adams Delano.

The Annual Meeting, held on January 12, was as always in memory of our fellow members who had died during the year. Subsequent meetings, with the speakers and their topics, were as follows:

February 2—Bassett Jones, on "A Theatrical Adventure."

March 1—Richardson Pratt, "The Annual Report of the Treasurer."

April 5—Fairfield Osborn, on "Man, Animals, and This and That." Mr. Osborn illustrated his talk with motion picture films.

May 3—Allen W. Dulles, an informal talk on the American intelligence setup and the conduct of intelligence work in a democracy.

November 1—The Vintage Festival.
December 6—Edgar F. Romig, on "Visiting in Hungary and Czechoslovakia in 1956."

At the Dinner of Welcome to New Members on October 18, the address was given by Centurion Arnold Whitridge, and the Clubhouse was filled to capacity.

Charles Garside, Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON HONORS

Memorial Cups. There are now on hand fifty-seven memorial cups that are used for "silversmiths." In view of the large number of these, the Committee suggested to the Board of Management that hereafter members be given the choice of selecting for memorials one of three types of silver cups, namely, silversmith cups, beer mugs, or small Century martini cups. This recommendation was approved by the Board.

Gift Book. The Chairman appointed a sub-Committee, consisting of Karl Vogel and William A. Lockwood, to prepare appropriate statements to accompany the names of those departed Centurions who had made bequests by will and gifts of funds to the Century. These statements were approved by the Board and will be inscribed appropriately in the Gift Book established for this purpose at the time of the Centennial Celebration.

Appreciation to Mr. Isaac N. Terry. The Committee prepared an appropriate resolution to recognize the more than thirteen years of service that Mr. Terry, a former member of the office staff, had rendered to the Association. This resolution was unanimously adopted by the Board and presented to Mr. Terry following his eightieth birthday.

Gilmore D. Clarke, Chairman

ARTICLE VI

Of the Members

§ 1. The number of resident members is limited to one thousand. [Amended February 6, 1892.]

§ 2. Any member who, having paid the entrance fee and the dues for one year, is absent from the United States for a continuous period of not less than twelve months shall, during his absence, be exempt from the payment of dues, provided that he shall have given to the Treasurer previous notice in writing of his intention to be absent. Absentees shall not be counted in the limitation of the number of resident members. In case the return of absentees shall increase the number above the limit prescribed, no new resident members shall be chosen until the number shall be reduced by resignation or otherwise below such limit.

§ 3. There shall also be a class of non-resident members, not exceeding seven hundred in number, to consist of persons residing permanently more than fifty miles from New York City Hall, and having no office or place of business in New York. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

All members of the Armed Forces of the United States, who are now members or who may be elected to membership, may at their option be held to be non-resident members during their active service. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

An artist member who has paid an entrance fee as a resident member may at his option elect to be classified as a non-resident member and be liable for annual dues as such but shall remain entitled to all the privileges of the Association, including the right of voting and of holding office. [Amended April 3, 1947.]

§ 4. No person shall be admitted as a member of the Association unless he shall have been recommended by the Committee on Admissions, on the proposal of two members not belonging to that Committee.

The name of every person proposed for admission, whether as a resident or a non-resident member, with his residence and the names of the members proposing him, shall be posted in the rooms at least fifteen days before being acted upon by the Committee. The Committee shall receive and consider all communications in reference to the persons proposed, and make careful examination as to their qualifications; it shall pass upon each name separately, and two negative votes shall be a rejection of the candidate. The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential.

At every monthly meeting of the Association the Committee shall furnish printed lists, properly classified, of the names of the persons recommended for admission, not exceeding twenty in number, and the Association shall then proceed to vote by depositing the lists with tellers appointed by the Chairman. The erasure from the list of any name shall be considered a vote in the negative. If negative votes be cast against any candidate to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast, his candidacy shall be referred back to the Committee on Admissions for further consideration. If the candidacy of such person again comes before the Association, negative votes cast against such person to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast shall exclude him from membership. [Amended January 8, 1953.]

No person so excluded shall be eligible for election within twelve months thereafter.

§ 5. Non-resident members may at any time, on and after the 30th April, 1896, be transferred from the list of resident members upon application in writing to the Treasurer. The members so transferred shall not be entitled to reimbursement of any part of the entrance fee. [Amended February 1896.]

Non-resident members shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association, except the right of voting and of holding office. They shall be subject to the Constitution and By-Laws and to all the regulations of the Association.

§ 6. The Secretary and Treasurer, two weeks previous to each monthly meeting, shall determine the number of vacancies in each class of members and certify the same to the Committee on Admissions.

§ 7. An entrance fee of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by each resident member, and of one hundred dollars by each non-resident member.

Such payment shall be made within thirty days after notice in writing of his election; or if within thirty days after such notice the member gives written notice to the Treasurer of his desire to do so, such payment may be made in four instalments, each of one quarter of the amount of the entrance fee; the first instalment shall be payable within thirty days after notice of his election, the second instalment within six months after such notice, the third instalment within twelve months after such notice, and the fourth instalment within eighteen months after such notice.

In default of such payment of the entrance fee, or the first instalment thereof, within thirty days after such notice, the member shall be deemed to have declined his election unless the Board of Management determines otherwise.

If any member fails to pay a subsequent instalment of his entrance fee when due, he shall be notified thereof in writing, and unless such instalment shall be paid within one month after such notice he shall thereupon cease to be a member unless the Board of Management determines otherwise. [Amended January 14, 1939.]

§ 8. The annual dues of resident members shall be one hundred twenty-five dollars, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November; and the annual dues of non-resident members shall be sixty-two and one-half dollars, payable on admission, and on each first day of May thereafter. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

The dues of all newly-elected members shall be computed proportionally from the first day of the month succeeding their election.

When the dues of any member shall remain unpaid for the space of three months, the Treasurer shall cause him to be notified that, unless the same be paid within one month thereafter, his membership will cease; and in case such dues shall not be paid pursuant to such notice, or such default be accounted for to the Board of Management, he shall thereupon cease to be a member.

In case any member of the non-resident class other than an artist member shall come to reside within the radius above named, or shall establish an office or place of business in the City of New York, it shall be his duty forthwith to notify the Treasurer of the Association in writing of such change, and he shall then be deemed a resident member with annual dues accordingly, and unless he has already paid the entrance fee of a resident member, he shall also pay to the Treasurer within thirty days the additional amount of entrance fees necessary to constitute him a resident member; in default of such payment he shall cease to be a member. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

It shall be the duty of each member to keep the Treasurer informed of his address.

§ 9. Honorary members may be elected from the membership of the Association on the recommendation of the Board of Management, at a regular monthly meeting, by an affirmative vote by ballot of not less than nine-tenths of the votes cast. No more than one honorary member shall be chosen in any one year. Honorary members shall be exempt from the payment of annual dues and shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office. [Amended, April 5, 1956.]

§ 10. Any member may be suspended or expelled for violation of the Constitution or By-Laws, or for any offence or misconduct which may be deemed sufficient to warrant such suspension or expulsion, by a vote, at a monthly meeting, of three-fourths of the members present, one month's previous notice having been given to the member charged. It shall be the duty of the Board of Management to report any member for action under this rule.

The Board of Management shall also have the power for a like cause, by the affirmative vote of eleven (11) of its members, after a hearing has been granted on one month's previous notice, to suspend any member from all privileges as such member indefinitely, pending further action; but any member affected thereby may require the resolution of suspension to be reported to the Association.

Membership may also be forfeited by failure to pay any indebtedness to the Association, in such manner as may be prescribed by the By-Laws.

§ 11. In the rooms of the Association, betting of any kind is strictly prohibited. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

ARTICLE VIII

Of Amendments

§ 1. This Constitution shall commence and take effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870, and the previous Constitution thereupon shall cease.

§ 2. No alteration or amendment of this Constitution shall be made unless the same be proposed at a previous regular meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and be finally adopted at a subsequent meeting by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

§ 3. By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, not inconsistent with the Charter or this Constitution, may be made, adopted, altered, or repealed at any monthly or annual meeting; provided, the proposed by-law, rule, regulation, alteration, or repeal shall have been proposed at a previous monthly meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and shall be adopted by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

§ 1. No book, journal, paper, picture, statue, or other work of art, the property of the Association, shall be taken from the rooms, under any pretext whatever, except by authority of the Board of Management.

§ 2. On the first day of each month or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, there shall be sent to each member notice of his indebtedness to the Association on the last day of the preceding month, and if the same is not paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month the names of the members so in default, together with the amounts due, shall be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

In case any such indebtedness shall not be discharged at the expiration of a month from the date of such first notice, a second notice shall be mailed to the member in default, notifying him that further credit will not be extended to him until his indebtedness is discharged, and that in case he continues in such default for ten days thereafter, he will be excluded from all privileges of the Association until such indebtedness is paid, and such member shall thereupon, upon the expiration of such ten days, be so excluded, and notice to that effect shall thereupon be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

At any time during such exclusion the Board of Management may declare the membership of such delinquent to be forfeited, and his name shall thereupon be dropped from the roll of members.

But before such action shall be taken by the Board of Management, it shall cause a copy of this By-Law to be mailed to the delinquent member.

A copy of this By-Law shall be sent with such second notice.

§ 3. A suggestion book shall be kept at the rooms in which every member is authorized to enter, under his signature, any complaint as to the management of the Association, and any suggestions he may desire to make.

§ 4. Visitors:

(a) A member may introduce a guest to the rooms of the Association for one day by entering the name and address of such guest and the date in the book to be kept for that purpose. This privilege may be suspended for any particular day by the House Committee. A member may not introduce the same person as a daily guest more than twice in the calendar year, and may not introduce more than one daily guest on the same day.

(b) A member may invite visitors to the Art Gallery during any Art Exhibition of the Association through signing cards of invitation printed for that purpose, but such cards of invitation shall not entitle visitors to pass to other parts of the house.

(c) A member may introduce guests to the private dining room when he has reserved that room for an entertainment.

(d) The House Committee, at the request in writing of a member, may extend the privileges of the Association for a total period of one month in any twelve months to a guest whose residence is more than fifty miles from the City Hall. Extension of this time may, on the recommendation of the House Committee, be granted by the Board of Management.

A member may not obtain from the House Committee such privileges for more than one guest at a time, nor for the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months. Guest privileges extended by the House Committee or on its recommendation may be terminated at the discretion of the Committee at any time. [Amended May 6, 1954.]

(e) Guests while enjoying the privileges of the Association as provided in paragraphs (a) and (d) are on the same footing as non-resident members, except that they may not introduce visitors and may not be present at any business meeting of the Association. Nor shall the House Committee grant the same privileges to the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months.

(f) A member who obtains admission to the club-house for a guest becomes responsible for the conduct of such guest and for any indebtedness of such guest to the Association.

(g) The Board of Management may modify these rules to meet special cases.

(h) It is the duty of the House Committee to enforce the provisions of this section and promptly to report to the Board of Management all cases of persistent violation thereof.

(i) In case of violation of any of the provisions of this section, the House Committee may summarily suspend the privileges accorded therein with regard to any member or visitor for a period not exceeding ten days, and in all cases of violation the Board of Management may suspend such privileges for such period as in their discretion the interest of the Association may require.

(j) In addition to the powers herein above granted, the Board of Management may provide for the invitation of authors, artists, and composers of music to be guests of the Association.

Such invitations shall be for the term of one year but shall be renewable; and the total number so invited shall not exceed fifty at any one time. [Amended November 5, 1942.]

§ 5. The House Committee shall have the charge of furnishing supplies, employing stewards and servants, keeping the rooms and premises of the Association in order for use, regulating the place, character and the extent of recreation and amusements in the club-house, and enforcing the rule as to admission of visitors. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

The care of newspapers and current periodicals is entrusted to the House Committee.

§ 6. The Committee on Literature shall have charge of the Library, and of the supply of books, and shall subscribe for periodicals and newspapers. Loud or continuous conversation shall not be carried on in the Library, nor, except on Thursday nights, shall refreshments be served therein.

§ 7. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all works of art owned or possessed by the Association; and it shall be their duty to make arrangements for exhibition, at monthly and annual meetings, of the works of artists of the Association, and other works of art, at their discretion. They shall keep a catalogue of the works of art owned or possessed by the Association, or exhibited in its rooms, and shall record therein every such work, with the name of the author, the title of the work, and the time of exhibition. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all decorations of the rooms. No work of art shall be accepted as a gift, or purchased by the Association, until the Committee on Art has made a report thereon to the Board of Management.

§ 8. The expenditures of the House Committee, and the Committees on Literature and Art, shall be limited to such sums as the Board of Management shall prescribe.

§ 9. A perfect list of members, officers, and committees shall be kept posted up in the rooms of the Association; and such list shall be corrected under the direction of the Treasurer and Secretary, from time to time, as changes occur.

§ 10. The above By-Laws shall go into effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870.

§ 11. A Nominating Committee shall annually be constituted as follows. The Board of Management shall at its last spring meeting propose as candidates for such committee the names of seven members of the Club, of whom two shall be members of the Board of Management, not eligible for re-election, and two shall be members of the Committee on Admissions. The names shall be posted in the club-house at least twenty days before the November monthly meeting of the Club. At any time not later than ten days before the November monthly meeting, additional candidates may be proposed for the Committee, provided that in each case the proposal, indorsed by twenty-five resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

All the names proposed by either of the above methods shall be printed in a single list, the names proposed by the Board of Management being designated by an asterisk. From this list, which shall be distributed at the monthly meeting in November, the Club shall elect by ballot the Nominating Committee. Each member may vote for not more than seven names on the list, and the seven candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. [Amended May 1, 1952.]

The Nominating Committee shall at the earliest practicable moment post in the club-house the names of candidates for all the positions to be filled. Additional candidates for such positions or any of them, may be nominated, and shall be posted, provided that in each case the nomination, indorsed by fifty resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club not later than one week before the Annual Meeting.

The Secretary of the Club shall prepare printed lists of all candidates named by either of the aforesaid methods, the names to be grouped under the titles of the positions to be filled; the candidates for Trustees to be arranged in three groups, designated respectively as Authors, Artists, and Amateurs, and all names proposed by the Nominating Committee to be designated by an asterisk. These lists shall be distributed to members at the Annual Meeting, and shall serve as ballots in the election, provided that nothing herein be construed to restrict the right of any member to vote by means of written names for persons whose names do not appear in print.

§ 12. An Investment Committee consisting of four members and the Treasurer shall be appointed by the Board of Management annually. It shall be the duty of this committee to supervise the investments of the Club and to advise the Treasurer with respect to the purchase and sale of its investments.

REQUIREMENTS OF # THE COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

FOR the guidance of members of the Association, the Year-Book contains the Requirements of the Committee and the extract from the Committee's minutes concerning the interpretation of "amateurs of letters and the fine arts."

With respect to letters concerning candidates, the members of the Association are requested to send to the Committee such information, whether favorable or unfavorable, as they feel will assist in the consideration of a candidate. Article I of the Constitution declares: "This Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts." The mere endorsement of a name is of little help to the Committee in determining whether a candidate, whatever his vocation, has such breadth of interest and qualities of mind as would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in such a society.

Members are requested not to propose, second, or endorse more than one candidate in any one letter.

All communications are confidential. After final action has been taken on a candidate, letters unfavorable to him are returned to their writers by registered mail. The letters of proposers and seconders are deposited in the archives, and all other letters are destroyed, except that, by a two-thirds vote of the Committee, any particular letter may be preserved in the archives. "The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential." (Constitution, Article VI)

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. The proposer must write to the Committee, stating the name, address, and qualifications of the candidate. The letter should convey definite information as to the candidate's background, vocation, attainments, character, and personality. If he is not an artist or an author, it should also give evidence as to those interests and tastes outside of his vocation which would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in a society of artists and authors.
2. The seconder must also write to the Committee in regard to the candidate. The letter should contain information of a character similar to that outlined for the proposer's letter.
3. The name, address, and vocation * of the candidate shall be entered in the Candidates' Book, preferably by the proposer and seconder, with their signatures. The Secretary of the Committee may make such entry when the letters of recommendation have been received from both proposer and seconder. A candidacy is not completed until these letters have been received and the entry has been made.
4. The candidate must be known to at least two members of the Committee if he is a candidate for resident membership or to at least one member if he is a candidate for non-resident membership. To facilitate the introduction of candidates to members of the Committee, proposers and seconders are asked to get in touch with the Chairman of the Sub-Committee to which the candidate has been assigned.

* The Committee on Admissions has long interpreted the term "amateur" as relating to "breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination" rather than to "occupation." It therefore suggests to proposers that in filling the space (in the Candidates' Book) designated "occupation," they use some term other than "amateur" to describe the candidate's "profession or occupation," in compliance with Rule I of the Committee, as adopted by the Association.

5. The Committee must receive, in addition to the letters of the proposer and seconder, at least ten letters from other members of the Association concerning a candidate for resident membership or at least six letters concerning a candidate for non-resident membership. These letters should do more than merely endorse a candidate; they should contain information which will be a source of enlightenment to the Committee as to the candidate's qualifications.

"AMATEURS OF LETTERS AND THE FINE ARTS"

[From the Minutes of the Committee on Admissions, January 23, 1923]

Your special Committee appointed to consider the difficulties that have lately developed within the Admissions Committee over the interpretation of the word "amateur" in Article I of the Constitution, and to report on a suggestion that Article I should be amended, has made inquiries, has considered, and now reports.

We find that for more than sixty years the Committee on Admissions has been guided in passing upon qualifications of candidates not by such a narrow interpretation of the words "amateurs of letters and the fine arts" as would have required candidates to be experts or connoisseurs, but rather by the view that those words as used in the Constitution were intended to admit gentlemen of any occupation provided their breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination made them sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companions in a society of authors and artists. We believe that this construction has long been clearly expressed through the Century's membership, and that the Admissions Committee may now regard it as being sanctioned and established by long usage and tradition. Consequently, we also think that the Admissions Committee need not hesitate to govern itself accordingly, and need not call upon the Club to undertake the difficult task of formulating a precise definition of the word "amateur."

On the other hand, we see no reason why it should not be admitted here that the Admissions Committee has erred in particular cases. It seems better to recognize this than to let anyone suppose that mistakes are to be accepted as precedents for a lax standard. This is stated because confusion has lately resulted from just that supposition.

The Admissions Committee should make it clear to all its members that it intends to interpret "amateur" very broadly, but never to interpret it so loosely as to cover candidates who do not clearly possess what may be called a responsible sympathy with letters and the fine arts, no matter how eminent or successful they may be, no matter how respectable socially, or how deserving of recognition on special grounds. It is understood that the writer of a technical treatise is not such an "author" as the Constitution intends; similarly, a mere collector, no matter how untiring, might well stand outside our broadest interpretations of "amateur." We do not want spiritual mediocrity. Our standard is obviously hard to define. But if the word "culture" did not sound priggish to some ears, it would perhaps suggest most briefly what the Century requires of a candidate quite apart from any special kind of ability or success.

BY THE HISTORIAN

Grosvenor Atterbury

Grosvenor Atterbury graduated from Yale in 1891, and went into the Columbia School of Architecture. After a year there, he went to Paris and studied at the Beaux Arts. In 1894 he came back to New York and began to practise as an architect.

He was employed by the Russell Sage Foundation to lay out and design Forest Hills, the model town in Queens. This was not only a great success, but very interesting: even the railroad station, the post office, and the bank are in the same unusual style of all the other buildings.

Atterbury then developed a specialty in town planning, industrial housing, and model tenements, and became recognized as an expert in these fields. He saw that some prefabrication (at that time unknown) would effect important economies, and he devised a hollow building block that was used extensively in low-cost housing and finally became very important. Besides this somewhat earthy enterprise, he served as a consultant in architecture at Johns Hopkins and as an associate professor at the Yale School of Architecture.

He lived a long time, and was a member of the Century for 56 years. In his prime he knew all the amusing and lively people of the City, and was held in high regard. He was an amateur painter of considerable skill, and he always used to have a picture or two in the fall show at the Club. Everybody liked him and wished him well, and what he put his hand to he drove through to success.

Frank Aydelotte

Frank Aydelotte graduated from Indiana University in 1900 and took the A.M. at Harvard in 1903. Two years later he was awarded a Rhodes Scholarship and took up his studies at Brasenose College, Oxford. He often said that Oxford had been the most profound influence in his whole life. He took the B.Litt. degree in English literature in 1908, and came back to the United States to teach.

In 1921 he was appointed President of Swarthmore, and under his regime that college extended enormously in its capacity and influence and reputation, and came to take a distinguished place in the field of higher education in America. Aydelotte's real preoccupation, however, was being secretary of the Rhodes Scholarships, and he filled that post for 35 years.

He reorganized the method of selecting Rhodes scholars. The famous will of Cecil Rhodes had assigned the same number of scholarships to each of the 48 states. In a small state like Delaware there might be two candidates, and in a big one next door, like Pennsylvania, 20 or 30; the tenth man in Pennsylvania, who was of course rejected, might be better qualified than the first in Delaware.

The only way to change the system was to change Rhodes's will itself by an Act of Parliament, but Parliament would hardly do that without American approval. Aydelotte saw and seized the opportunity. He formulated a plan by which the country was divided into eight electoral districts, and the best men from each were to be selected. He then toured the country from coast to coast presenting his plan to Rhodes committees. It is no small tribute to his power of persuasion that, in spite of the jealous tradition of states' rights, he won in the end almost unanimous support for his plan, which was shortly afterward sanctioned by Parliament.

Aydelotte also made another important contribution to American education. He broke what he used to call "the academic lock-step" in America. The prime difference between higher education in Britain and in America is that Britain is trying to educate a select few (about 85,000 at a time) in her universities, while America is trying to educate en masse (about 3,500,000 at a time). Quantitatively the American performance is magnificent; qualitatively it is less impressive. The abler students have too often been lost in the crowd. Here again Aydelotte saw the need and opportunity. When he was made President of Swarthmore, he determined to make the college a testing ground for a new curriculum, in which the abler students were singled out after their first two years and permitted to go as fast and as far as they could. His programme was a modification of the Oxford honor school and tutorial systems specially adapted to American needs. The result was that Swarthmore took first place among American colleges in the proportion of graduate scholarships won by its students. But there was a more significant result. Aydelotte had found a formula for combining quality and quantity in education, and soon colleges throughout the country were adopting various versions of his honors programme.

In 1939 he resigned the presidency of Swarthmore to become Director of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton. He remarked that his life had "been one of stirring adventure"; and it surely had been. He enjoyed it to the full. He had important ideas of his own, and he was able to put them into operation and have them accepted by those who mattered to him. And that is about the most fun there is.

Gifford Reynolds Beal

Gifford Beal graduated from Princeton in 1900. He was destined to be a painter, and he had already started his art studies under William M. Chase and at the Art Students League. In the City he lived in an apartment at 27 West Sixty-seventh Street, where there are studios that go up two stories and where a lot of artists live. But most of his painting was done at Rockport, Massachusetts, where he very early established himself. Rockport is on a rocky promontory that runs out into the bay; and the little harbor there has ancient stone piers and weather-beaten fish houses that are used by the schooners and sloops that come in every day with their catch.

Gifford liked the life of the sea: the gulls, the wharfs, the tossing dories, the smell of the salt water; and it greatly inspired him and resulted, over the years, in many distinguished canvases. Sometimes he made trips to Salem, or Marblehead, or Gloucester, and other times he would go to the back country, to Ipswich, or Essex, and sketch. It is a wonderful country, with shipbuilding, fox hunting, the sun flashing on the Plum Island strand, and it was all made for Gifford's brush. It excited him, and his enthusiasm was contagious.

He was marvellously pleasant. Once in his student days, he went to a party at Chase's studio in Tenth Street that was given by John Singer Sargent in honor of Carmencita, the famous Spanish dancer. Gifford wanted to meet Sargent, whom he had never seen, and sometime early in the evening he asked: "When is Mr. Sargent going to arrive?" The reply was: "Why, my boy, you've been talking with him for the past quarter hour."

For a long time Beal was President of the Art Students League and labored over the young artists. He was very kind, and they used to come to see him and to get his advice and suggestions. In the Century he was a tower of strength. In 1950 he was given a one-man show in the gallery, and it had the largest opening in the history of the Club. It was a love feast. Everyone was delighted, and Gifford had a perfectly wonderful time. He served on the Committee on Art longer than any Centurion ever, and for fifteen years he was its Chairman. One of his paintings, "Wingesheek Beach," now hangs in the Billiard Room.

Painters work with their hands, and in this they are fortunate, for they seem to escape the black bile that so often deranges the equanimity of poets and composers—and a good many of the rest of us, too.

Louis Bromfield

Louis Bromfield was born on his father's farm in Mansfield, Ohio. He wanted to become a scientific farmer, but his mother insisted that he prepare for "an intellectual career." He worked for a few months on a local newspaper, and then he went off to the Cornell Agricultural School, but he returned after one semester to the family farm. He was soon fed up with farming, and veered to the Columbia School of Journalism; but the First World War came along, and he left Columbia and joined the French army as an ambulance driver.

After the war he took to writing, and before he was thirty he had written four good novels ("Early Autumn" won the Pulitzer prize); and in the years that followed he turned out a succession of best sellers. He made a great deal of money doing this, and he became embroiled in all sorts of collateral matters ranging from vociferously opposing Universal Military Training to being Chairman of the American League for a Free Palestine. He was a very lively person—almost explosive—and he had positive ideas on everything that was going on. He was a petrel that went wherever he could discern the makings of a storm.

In 1939 he returned to Ohio, where he bought a 1,000-acre farm. Intermittently with his novels, he wrote four volumes on farming: mostly autobiographical. These were very widely read; and they caused enormous controversy—for Bromfield insisted that farming had been done quite all wrong ever since the first plough was invented. A later generation will have to decide whether he made a deeper impression with his novels or with his experimental farming and farm theories. At all events, he put the professional farmers, and tree-sprayers, and users of chemical fertilizers on the defensive, and they have never recovered their complacency.

He was a restless and inquiring man with, probably, too many interests; but he was a wonderful catalyst and created a fine uproar as he went along. Aside from his tireless toil on manuscripts, association with his friends, lecturing, and working on his farm, he was generous with his time and knowledge. He seemed to love all God's creatures, and he never despaired of the human race.

Roy Brown

Roy Brown was a landscape painter. He was born in Decatur, Illinois; but when he was young he came to New York and studied at the Art Students League and also in Paris at the Julien Academy. He was very clever with water colors, and in this field repeatedly won awards from the Salmagundi Club, the National Academy of Design, and the American Water Color Society. He kept a studio in the City, and spent his summers in Wilton, where he also had a studio.

He was untroubled by inward tensions and, like his painting, was fresh and spontaneous. His nature was frank, and he had an innate instinct for justice that sometimes led him on crusades. And he was a highly civilized person, and very pleasant to have around.

He loved to paint and he was exceedingly deft and skillful. These are the makings of happiness.

Francis Higginson Cabot

Higginson Cabot prepared at Groton, and graduated, Phi Beta Kappa, from Harvard in 1917. Then he went off to the War, serving as lieutenant in the Navy. When he got home he started work with the American International Corporation, which was the operating agency for Stone & Webster, and he got to know Charles A. Stone very well. Stone was interested in young men; and Higgie was extremely admiring of Stone and worked for him till 1935. Being then about forty, he persuaded his wife to quit New York, and they bought a farm in tidewater Virginia where they lived happily ever after.

Higgie had a marvellous time being retired. He worked hard at farming and became very competent at it; and in the summers he went to Murray Bay, where he had a seigneurie inherited from his grandmother. With the French Canadians he was exceedingly popular, and he spoke exactly the same execrable French that they do. In Richmond he was made a member of the Commonwealth Club and he never lacked companionship. He remarked, himself, with some amusement, that he had enrolled in the Democratic Party.

Higgie was an extremely able man. He could understand and analyse complicated situations almost at sight, and he had a Yankee capacity to say nothing until the time was ripe. He was economical in small matters and generous in large ones, and he lived simply but well. He was interested in music and had a first-class tenor voice, and this interest continued all his life. He was only sixty years old when he died—a charming and exciting companion, a good man and true.

Samuel Paul Capen

Samuel P. Capen graduated from Tufts in 1898, Phi Beta Kappa; then he took an A.M. at Harvard, and in 1902 a Ph.D. at Pennsylvania. From there he joined the faculty of Clark College, and eventually became professor of modern languages.

He was interested in college and university planning and administration, and was the first director of the American Council on Education. In this field he became very well known and highly thought of; and in 1922 he was appointed Chancellor of the University of Buffalo.

Buffalo was founded in 1846, but by 1922 it had not shown much promise. Capen, however, took it vigorously in hand, and when he retired it had a good medical school, more than 10,000 students, and a faculty of more than 1,200; in short, it became a real educational institution under his administration. For this he got the credit, and he deserved it. He was recognized as one of the academic leaders in that part of the country, but his reputation extended to a much wider field.

Sam Capen was much more than a good administrator: he was a beacon light of liberalism. He said:

"Freedom of inquiry, freedom to choose without let or hindrance the subjects into which one will inquire, freedom to publish the results of inquiry, freedom to teach what one has found out and what any one else has found and proved, freedom of opinion and of utterance—academic freedom in this all-inclusive sense has not yet been surely won by American universities. A few institutions—the number is tragically small—have a nearly perfect record as defenders of this citadel of scholarship. But, in many universities, the scholar whose specialty includes matters that are subjects of public controversy runs the risk of suppression or dismissal. His security lies in what is grossly miscalled discretion. The areas of danger are not the same in all parts of the country and in all types of institutions. Moreover, as time has passed they have in general shifted from theology and philosophy to the natural and then to the social sciences. They shift, but they do not disappear. . . . It is unnecessary to say that, wherever freedom of inquiry and of teaching are circumscribed at all, the university is emasculated."

He also said:

"Why should any Americans be fearful of the menace of the communist doctrine to the United States? They should not be. It is no menace, if we see it for what it is. Our small destructive band of local communists—most of whom are only secondarily communists and primarily foreign agents—represents a menace, to be sure. But it is a menace we can handle readily enough, if we see them for what they are and never take our eye off them.

"Out of false labels and baffling code words a horrid bogeyman has been created to scare the American people. To our shame, we have to admit that a good many Americans are frightened by it. Some of them are particularly fearful lest the young . . . may be seduced by the charms of the monster."

These remarks he made in the course of addresses to the students. They are the outward and audible signs of the inward and spiritual grace that animated him. He was a watchdog of freedom; and when it was threatened, by social pressures to conform, or by government witch-hunters, there he would be found ready to draw his sword in its defence.

Donald Carlisle graduated from the University of California in 1916. After the First World War, he went to work for the Batten Company (later Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn) as an account executive, and he kept at this till the Second World War came along—which released him.

He served with an Army military government unit in Europe; and after the war he translated a long-time interest in animals into a full-time occupation. He was made a vice-president of the New York Zoological Society, and he filled that position the rest of his life. He wrote books about animals, and he reviewed, for The New York Times, books that others wrote about them. To his original writings he added another dimension—illustration—that he described as inexpert; but competent critics hailed it for its whimsical and artistic qualities. Only a few days before he died, he drew a cartoon to be used for a membership drive of the Zoo depicting a delightful little Pan, sitting on a hillside, blowing his pipes to attract wildlife around him.

To be a naturalist is good fun. No two animals are just the same. When you relieve their pain, or anxiety, or hunger, they are grateful; and between times they are often friendly and affectionate—as St. Francis found.

Thomas Witter Chrystie

Thomas W. Chrystie prepared at Taft School. He graduated from Columbia in 1924, and from the Columbia Law School in 1926. The following year he was admitted to the New York bar, and entered his father's law office in the City. They formed a firm, Chrystie and Chrystie; and when his father retired in 1952 he became a partner in Webster, Sheffield & Chrystie.

Tom's family had been around New York for many generations. A paternal ancestor was appointed one of the original trustees of King's College by the Royal Charter granted in 1754, and the Chrystie men have gone to Columbia for 200 years. Tom's father was an alumni trustee of Columbia, and so also was Tom; and in 1947 he was awarded the Alumni Medal for conspicuous services to the University. The day he died, the flags of the Columbia Club and the Century faced each other at half-mast across Forty-third Street.

As a lawyer, Tom was regarded as a preeminent authority on the law of domicile; and he had at different times represented the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the State of Connecticut in important litigation involving this theme.

He was a trustee of Taft School, and a member of the Society of Cincinnati; but his great interest was Columbia. He had been an officer of the Columbia Club, President of the Columbia College Alumni Association, and president of his Class. He was pleasant, and filled with common sense, and very popular; and he had a wonderfully good time. He was kindhearted and tough fibred, and he combined high spirits with an infinite curiosity and patience respecting persons and ideas. He never doubted that a good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and that was the way he lived.

D'Alton Corry Coleman

D'Alton C. Coleman was born in Ontario and educated in the public schools. As a boy he worked as tallyman in a lumberyard, and from there he went to a business college. When he was only 18 he was city editor of the Belleville (Ontario) Intelligencer, and then he served for a time on the editorial staff of the Port Huron (Michigan) Daily Times.

In 1898 he went to work for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in 1947 he retired as President of it. He must have occupied every rank in the company beginning with engineer's clerk. He was a true Canadian, and the great railroad has its roots deep in Canada's history. To the office of president he brought a far-reaching understanding of things Canadian, in their mood, and background, and meaning; and the range of his active interests included universities, schools, theatres, hospitals, musical festivals, and sports. At one time he even kept a stable of race horses. All this was exhilarating. He worked hard, and it went well.

When the Second World War came, the Canadian Pacific was a Gibraltar of strength for the Commonwealth, supplying transportation and ships, and making ordnance in its vast shops. Coleman was drafted for a hundred projects, from formulating a plan for Air Training to lending the whole Château Frontenac for the Quebec Conference. It was this keenness and variety that made him not only a remarkable administrator but one who seemed to thrive on responsibility and to derive great joy from his labors.

Withal he was a gentle person, given to reading books and listening to music.

Henry Edward Crampton

Henry E. Crampton graduated from Columbia in 1893 and took a Ph.D. there in 1899. He was zoölogist, and from the time of his graduation he taught at Columbia and Barnard. In those days biology was supposed to have something to do with medicine, and the department was lodged in a room in the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Harry was brought up on the works of Darwin, and Spencer, and Huxley, and he became marvellously interested in evolution. He discovered an island in the South Pacific, evidently the peak of some sunken mountain, where deep ravines ran from the top down to the shore. In each of these gorges lived an isolated colony of snails. All these snails belonged to the genus Partula. These Partulae never cross sand, nor go into deep water, and the young are hatched as tiny adults, so there is no chance that the members of a given colony could be spread around as free-swimming larvae. Thus, each separate colony is an isolated group with its own particular species and subspecies.

When Harry saw all this he realized he had here a laboratory that had been operating for a million years under the laws of evolution: with changes coming from mutations, and new combinations of genes, and the sifting action of natural selection. He collected snails, brought them home, examined them with microscopes, and got to know them very well. Then he wrote a book about evolution and the science of genetics: a first-class contribution to the modern knowledge of these mysteries.

The same year he published the book, 1911, he was elected to the Century. He was a perfect member. Among other things, he was one of the organizers of the Stimulation Committee, and he attended most of the meetings of that committee from 1924 till the time of his death. The Committee has done an important job in finding men who ought to be members of the Club, and getting them proposed by suitable people; and Harry was very proud of his part in all this, and justly so. In 1946 he was made an Honorary Member of the Century—and everyone rejoiced.

He used to play cowboy pool; but his back became impaired, so he could not bend over, and he made all the shots with a bridge. His admirers thereupon presented him with a special bridge at an hilarious ceremony in the Billiard Room where Harry played cowboy till after midnight.

Last year, on his eightieth birthday, about fifty of his friends gave him a dinner. Harry announced beforehand that he never made speeches, and certainly wouldn't at the dinner; but several good friends did, and the old man was so moved that he got up and took the ever present pipe out of his mouth, and, for once, he did make a little speech.

Harry did so much for the Club over so long a period that one almost forgets that he was one of the leading zoölogists of his time. He brought lustre to the Columbia faculty, and he was invaluable to the Museum of Natural History. He was extremely able, a scrupulous investigator; once launched on a problem he never let it go. He labored in a controversial field of science, and was a target for Lamarckians, theologians, and Russian Communists; but always on these fires intense he played the hose of common sense.

Stuart Miller Crocker

Stuart Crocker prepared at the Cambridge Latin School, and graduated from Harvard in 1921. When he entered Harvard he was headed to be a surgeon, and he took a course in German so as to be able to study chemistry and physiology in that language. In the classroom, by chance, he sat next to Charles Young, the son of Owen D. Young. This led to a lifelong friendship, and to Stuart's getting to know the whole Young family very well. He himself generously remarked many years later that all and everything he amounted to was due to Owen D. Young.

However that may be, when he got out of college Owen Young gave him a job with R.C.A. and later with the General Electric Company; and from these beginnings he went on to a spectacular career in the business world. He finally emerged as chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the Columbia Gas System, but on the way he had held all sorts of important offices in the General Electric Company and in the gas and power corporations of the seaboard. The list of his directorships is the roster of the public utilities, and the electrical supply companies of the country, and their bankers. In truth, it is difficult for the unsophisticated to understand how he could possibly have kept track of all he was involved with.

Likewise, he belonged to an incredible number of clubs, ranging from Chatham to Pittsburgh, to such an extent that it would appear that he was somewhat ingenuous about this matter. And this really is the kind of man he was—quite artless—but he combined with this a tremendous capacity for detailed work by which things got done, whether he was working for a corporate employer or on some community enterprise.

He was President of the Roosevelt Hospital in the City, and he was a former trustee of Colgate University, Milton Academy, and the New York Trade School. He had been a director of the Hospital for twenty-two years. Perhaps his interest in this harked back to the early days when he was going to be a surgeon.

He used to refer to himself as a Quaker from Cape Cod, and his character proclaimed his salty upbringing and his faith. He was forthright and simple. He liked people, and he had a gift of putting men at their ease. In his chosen field he went far and fast—not because he was endowed with imagination or originality, but rather because he was a thoroughly reliable executive. He was one of the Sons of Martha; but only the Sons of Mary, like Owen Young, were aware of it; and Stuart's heart was never troubled.

Victor Elting

Victor Elting was born in Yonkers, and graduated from Columbia in 1891. He had an uncle who was a lawyer and lived in Battle Creek, so Victor went to the Ann Arbor Law School and was admitted to the Illinois bar in 1892. Contrary to his expectations, he did not start with his uncle, but got himself a job in a law office in Chicago, and he practised law there for many years.

By a curious chance he was appointed a master in chancery when he was thirty-two, and this made him well known, and gave him a good start as a lawyer. After a while he bought a house in Winnetka on the shore of Lake Michigan and brought his family up there. It was a very pleasant life, with horses, and tennis, and dressing for dinner, and being on the vestry of the local Episcopal Church.

When the First World War broke out Victor was over forty—too old to enlist—so he went to Washington as one of the top officials of the Volunteer American Protection League, which had been organized by the Department of Justice. He was exceedingly useful there, and had a very good time. In truth, he had a good time at anything he did; and he was blessed with a sense of humor about himself that saved him from ever being stuffy.

His wife died suddenly in 1932; and this left Victor at loose ends. She had been the reason why he lived in Chicago, and he found it was impossible for him to continue alone the way of life he was accustomed to. He occupied himself with duties as a trustee of Knox College, busied himself in writing his autobiography, and went into the Canadian wilderness on an elaborate hunting trip; but he did not like Chicago any more, and after a while he came to New York to live. For a decade he was at the Century a great deal—a popular and familiar denizen of the Billiard Room. He kept a large car of an ancient vintage, and used to drive around in Fairfield County and Westchester, spending week ends with friends, of whom he had a legion. He was always good company, not in the least shy, and he came to know more and more people. But this is not a restful mode of existence, and Father Time began to overtake him. It got to be too much of an effort; and finally he pulled up stakes and went back to Chicago, where his children and grandchildren lived.

After that we did not see him any more at the Club.

Henry Pratt Fairchild

Henry P. Fairchild graduated from Doane College, Nebraska, in 1900, and he took the Ph.D. at Yale in 1909. In the rural part of Nebraska where he was brought up there was a large population of non-English-speaking immigrants, and this prompted a lifelong interest in racial problems and questions of immigration and economics. Fairchild became a social scientist; and he taught sociology at the International College at Smyrna, at Doane, at Bowdoin, and at Yale. In 1919 he was appointed Professor of Social Economy at New York University; and he continued a member of that faculty till 1945, when he retired as Professor Emeritus.

During his long career he wrote various books on his specialty, including Economics for the Millions. It seems fair to say that this book is a critique of our capitalist economy from the Marxist point of view, and perhaps this reveals Fairchild's general attitude. He was a good scholar, and a good teacher; but he was undeniably a socialist, and his friendliness for the Soviet Union was enhanced by such posts as National Secretary of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship and by lectures he delivered in criticism of Congressional investigative bodies. His effectiveness as a castigator of complacency and obscurantism would have been greater, of course, if he had been free from the suspicion of involvement with the dictatorship of the proletariat; but, for all that, he was a decent, honest man who worked hard on a myriad of community projects and spoke the truth as he saw it.

And, of course, he may have been right.

Frederick Carlos Ferry

Frederick C. Ferry graduated from Williams in 1891, and took the A.M. at Harvard in 1895. He had a kind of natural affinity for mathematics, and after taking the Ph.D., as required by the professors' labor union, he studied in Europe for several years. Then he returned to Williams, where he taught Latin, Greek, and mathematics, and before long was Dean of the College.

Ferry was an excellent dean. He had conspicuously good manners, and he spoke English with a precision that was good for the undergraduates to hear. He was very popular with the young and the old; and everyone at Williams was sorry to have him leave them in 1917 to become President of Hamilton.

This position he held the rest of his life, and he filled it with great success and to the exceeding satisfaction of the friends of Hamilton. Academic honors crowded on him. He was several times an LL.D. and he was most useful in the penumbral jobs that rim the scholarly life: the mathematical societies, the university associations, the Carnegie Foundation, and the College Entrance Examination Board.

There is a zone of high civilization that runs from Boston to Buffalo. Ferry lived in this part of the world practically all his life; and he liked it, and the people liked him and were glad and proud he was working among them.

Marshall Field

Marshall Field was born in Chicago. His father's health was not good, and he travelled around restlessly finally bringing up in England. Thus Marshall came to study at Eton and at Cambridge, and formed lasting associations with England and a generation of Englishmen.

Field's grandfather, Marshall Field the First, collected an enormous fortune as a Chicago merchant. His son, Field's father, died before the old man, who thereupon devoted himself to the composition of a will 22,000 words long and so complicated that it supported half the lawyers in Chicago for thirty years. The ultimate result was that $75,000,000 passed to Field in 1943 on his fiftieth birthday. He already had a good deal more than that, so he became one of the richest men in the world. This situation was an integral part of Field's personality. He could not get away from it; nor could anyone else.

In England he was very popular. He was extremely good-looking, had perfect manners, and he was interested and proficient in all the things that the world of fashion before the First World War was occupied with. When the War came, he volunteered, was commissioned a lieutenant of field artillery, and went with the A.E.F. to France, where he won the Silver Star for gallantry in action.

After the War he bought some 2,000 acres at Lloyd's Neck on Long Island, where he built a house and an indoor tennis court, and organized a shooting preserve. He then ran into the difficulty that attends such enterprises in this country: he could not get the people he wanted to come down and stay with him. He knew plenty of lively, interesting men, but all through the week they were engrossed in practising law, or architecture, or running newspapers, or were otherwise involved with arts and letters; and the only guests he could be sure of were the denizens of the stockbrokers' offices in Wall Street. Field was anything but stupid, and it did not particularly amuse him to operate a caravanserai for men whose only recommendations were that their clothes fitted and they had an inexhaustible fund of anecdotes.

He began to take an interest in good works and liberal causes, and in the expression of his own ideas in newspapers that he established or bought control of. When the witch-hunters got after Hutchins, President of Chicago University, Field supported him. He put up the money to establish PM, the first daily paper to be established in New York in sixteen years. With the encouragement of President Roosevelt, he started the Chicago Sun; and its first issue came out three days before Pearl Harbor. The Sun from its birth was locked in mortal combat with the isolationist Tribune, owned and directed by Colonel McCormick, and no quarter was expected or given.

From here in Field had a good time. The people he used to play polo with and who used to come and shoot his pheasants now referred to him as a traitor to his class, but he couldn't have cared less. He worked hard at the things that interested him: the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Metropolitan Opera, the Philharmonic-Symphony, and the never ending battle with the Chicago Tribune.

He matured late; but once past his salad days, there was nothing the matter with his head. He knew Europe, and had no patience with the delusion of a Fortress America or the idea that the United States could stand apart and alone in a frenzied world. He was not only a cultivated, civilized person; he was a man, generous and true, willing to fight for the right as he saw it.

Frederic Sydney Fleming

Frederic S. Fleming started out at the age of 14 as a baker's assistant, and at 20 he was assistant to the President of the National Biscuit Company. In spite of this rise in the business world, he did not like it; and he resigned to begin the study, meditation, and work for an ecclesiastical career.

In 1911 he graduated from Western Theological Seminary in Chicago, and was ordained a priest in the Episcopal Church. He worked in several parishes in Chicago—finally being named rector of the Church of the Atonement. Here he made a considerable reputation, and was called first to Providence, and then to New York. In 1932 he became rector of Trinity Church in the City.

This is, of course, an important post and exacts no small executive ability of the incumbent. Fleming was a good administrator; and he also found time to get around to the chapels maintained by Trinity and to talk with the families and children who were being ministered to. He was very happy in this work; and at his funeral an extraordinary number of men and women from the water front turned up—testifying to the affection and esteem in which he was held.

On the other hand, he harbored some curiously troglodytic ideas. He was a spokesman for the "high church" wing, and advocated the creation of an Archbishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He also vigorously opposed the admission of women as church wardens and vestrymen. As to these matters time and tide have run against him.

At the Club he was devoted to Austin Strong, and in moments of great weariness he would show up just in hopes that Austin would be there to talk brilliant nonsense and remove his transient depression. He was also affectionately interested in the servants, and in each of them, and seemed to know their names and all about their private lives. His patience and kindness to them was in amusing contrast to his intolerance of stupidity on the part of his fellow members.

He let his light so shine before men that they saw his good works and glorified God.

Hugh Gallaher

Hugh Gallaher was born in California of Irish stock. He prepared at Exeter, and graduated from Harvard in 1915. Shortly afterward he went off to the First World War; and he was stationed in a château in Brittany. There he came to know and admire the French; and in 1924 he spent some years in Paris in connection with the petroleum business.

He returned to New York in 1928 as manager of foreign sales of the Penn Metal Company, and he was Vice-President of that concern when he died. He was successful in business, but his real life was extracurricular. He lived at Darien, where he had a garden and a library, and Hugh worked hard at both of them.

His ideas were unorthodox and intelligent, and he expressed his opinions freely and without compromise. He was Commander of the Willard Straight Post of the American Legion in 1934, when the Post had the effrontery to oppose mulcting the taxpayers for a veterans' bonus. For this the Post was promptly expelled by the Legion, and execrated by all the veterans who regarded their military service as having a cash surrender value.

Hugh, however, took to the Courts, and was fully upheld (after all the appeals were in) and the national organization was directed in no uncertain terms to reinstate the Willard Straight Post—which was done.

He was a Democrat in Fairfield County, a position of isolation much resembling that of Lot in the plains of Mamre, but with this difference: that he was extremely popular with the Republicans. He rarely agreed with conventional people on anything; but they always forgave him his nonconformity, and went home after dinner with a feeling of having listened to the other side.

He was a good influence in the world. He moved in the station-wagon set, whom he compelled to constantly reexamine their basic assumptions. Socrates did likewise, long ago. It is well for men to think, and the first step is to discredit the accepted chants and slogans. This he was forever doing.

His was a bold spirit in a loyal breast.

Hamilton Gibson

Hamilton Gibson prepared at the Gunnery School, and graduated from Harvard in 1906. He taught English at the Berkshire School, Sheffield, Connecticut, for fourteen years; and then was called to be Headmaster of the Gunnery. He served in this position from 1922 until 1937, when he was compelled by ill health to retire; and during this period between the Wars he literally rebuilt and modernized the school.

He lived in a pleasant house in Washington (Connecticut); and he was tree warden of the town, and a trustee of the Steep Rock Association, which maintained a reservation in the valley of the Shepaug River. Gibson used to roam in the woods of the reservation both by day and by night, and commune with his Maker, and think things out in solitude.

He took an active interest in community affairs; and he developed considerable skill as a landscape painter. His father was a naturalist and painter, and these preoccupations were in his blood. Like Thoreau, he was at one with nature, and at peace with himself; and he had the great reward that the good teacher knows: the confidence and affection of the young.

Malcolm Goodridge

Malcolm Goodridge graduated from Princeton in 1894, and from Columbia's P. and S. in 1898. He practised medicine in the City all his life, and at his death was consulting physician to New York Hospital, Bellevue, and the Neurological Institute.

He was a general medical practitioner and specialist in internal medicine, a survival of the old-fashioned doctor. He was suave and friendly, and a past master in the art of handling difficult patients with tact and urbanity; and at the same time he was thoroughly abreast of the time and quite aware of the latest developments in medical research.

He was a keen observer and a remarkable diagnostician. During the early days of the reorganized Cornell Medical Center, clinicopathological conferences were held in the large amphitheatre of the College once a week. Goodridge shared the limelight on these occasions with his good friend and worthy adversary, Walter Niles. Cases were presented, findings submitted, and diagnoses invited by the moderator. After lively discussion and the presentation of diagnoses, the necropsy findings were revealed, and the final diagnosis pronounced. To hear Goodridge and Niles discuss and argue a given case was exciting: they went for each other quite informally and familiarly, but with no holds barred. Sometimes the final diagnosis proved Malcolm to be the winner; sometimes Niles it was who emerged victorious. Naturally, the students learned a great deal from these discussions. Cases submitted were always carefully selected as being particularly ticklish, and the Goodridge-Niles exchanges were the best possible demonstrations.

He was a good doctor and a good man, and he crowded a vast deal of extremely useful work and contentment into the span he was allowed. As the Father of Medicine laments: The life so short, the craft so long to learn.

Royal Storrs Haynes

Royal S. Haynes graduated from Cornell in 1899, Phi Beta Kappa, and from Columbia's P. and S. in 1903. He practised medicine in the City, and became Clinical Professor of Pediatrics at Columbia, and for many years he was consulting pediatrician to Sloane Hospital. He was extremely interested in defects in posture, and wrote a book about this problem—a very good book, too—but he was also a pillar of strength for sick children (and their mothers) no matter what the trouble was.

He came of old New England stock, on both sides, and New England called him though he lived in New York. He seriously studied the early history of Massachusetts and Connecticut; and he had in his bones a reverence for the people and the traditions of that territory, and spent his vacations sojourning in its wide areas.

He had a rare quality of attracting and holding friends. He wrote well—as an editor and author, his text had admirable scientific appreciation and clear and compelling description. It was fun to be with him, for he was possessed of a lively and pertinent humor, and he gave to companionship the quality of his own ample world of ideas and experience. The courage and patience with which he met a long and distressing terminal illness revealed the toughness and elevation of his spirit and character.

Children are like the olive branches; and whoso ministers unto them, he shall be at peace.

Cecil de Blaquiere Howard

Cecil Howard was educated in the public schools of Buffalo, and then studied at the Buffalo Art School and at Julien's Academy in Paris. He lived in Paris from 1905 till 1940, and became one of the leading sculptors of our time.

He and his French wife fled to America before the Nazi invasion; but after the United States entry into the war, he returned to France as a Major in the Office of Strategic Services and was with the first troops to enter Normandy.

His works are conceived with the same love that he injected into his relationship with all who came to know him. His forte was classicism. As in music, which is basically tone, so Howard's creations were basically form—the hallmark of all that rank high in achievement in the plastic art. He won the Paris Grand Prix in 1939, the Widener Gold Medal of the Pennsylvania Academy in 1944, the Legion of Honor in 1948, and many other testimonials to the imagination and technique that he brought to his work. The perfection of his sculptures is exciting to the ignorant and a source of exquisite pleasure to the artist.

The sinful painter drapes his goddess warm,
Because she still is naked, being dressed:
The godlike sculptor will not so deform
Beauty, which limbs and flesh enough invest.

Waldemar Bernhard Kaempffert

Waldemar Kaempffert was born in New York and graduated from City College in 1897. He got a job as assistant editor of The Scientific American, and while working at that he studied law at New York University and took his law degree in 1903. He was admitted to the bar, but never practised.

He worked along for The Scientific American, and then for the Popular Science Monthly; and in 1927 he became science editor of The New York Times. This position he filled for the rest of his life, writing a weekly column on current research and various news events in his field. He was not only an excellent writer, he was a first-class scientist. He felt that science was not the property of a learned class, but the common possession of mankind; and he set out to make it so. He remarked that the chief function of a science writer was to "make science so clear that the scientists could understand it."

His subject matter in the Times was as wide as nature itself. He speculated on the origin of life, a rocket trip to Mars, and whether a man could, theoretically, live forever. He discussed atomic energy, the end of the world, evolution, vitamins, sulfa drugs, industrial management, the effect of dictatorship on scientific progress, and self-hypnosis. He never sought to evoke emotions or a feeling of awe. He told the facts without belittling either science or the reader, and the educated and the ignorant alike were edified and interested. The truly wonderful thing about his writing was the way he steered a safe and sane course between technicality and vulgarization.

With all his talent and learning, he was a warm-hearted, sympathetic friend, a man who loved travel, music, the theatre, good food, good wines, good companions, who could listen well just as he could talk well. The divinity that shapes our ends permitted that he work almost to his last week with the same zest in search of truth as when he began his career of distinguished specializaton half a hundred years ago.

George Camp Keiser

George Keiser prepared at the Chicago Latin School, and graduated from Harvard in 1924. Then he went to the Columbia School of Architecture and graduated in 1930. From the age of five he had been interested in architecture, spending hours looking at photographs, drawing plans, and building models; but, in particular, he came to be fascinated by Islamic and Moorish designs and their history. This led him to travel in the Mediterranean and the Middle East; and he learned Arabic so as to read the Koran and the innumerable verses from it that are carved and painted everywhere in the Levant.

He practised architecture in Florida and in Connecticut—both at once—and then the Second World War came along, and he was commissioned in the Signal Corps and stationed, for the most part, in Washington. This assignment brought him in contact with some prominent men that he probably would not have met otherwise, and after the war he got them together and organized the Middle East Institute, to which he devoted most of his time from 1946 until his death. The Institute is an enterprise that has grown enormously in importance with the years; and George seemed to have grasped the potentialities of the Arab World long before any of the rest of us got around to it. It is the irony of fate that he should have died just at a time when his talents and experience would have been invaluable.

He lived at Wilton in the summer time, and had a full, busy, and constructive life. He was involved with the sugar business in the City, and with architecture, and watercolors, and music at home; and in the winter he worked in Washington over the affairs of the Middle East Institute. He was sufficiently endowed so that he could do about what he wanted; and he wisely exercised his varied and remarkable talents to the edification of his friends and his own great happiness.

Arnold Herman Knapp

Arnold Knapp was born in the City and graduated from Harvard in 1889. He took his medical degree from Columbia's P. and S. in 1892. He was Professor of Ophthalmology there from 1903 to 1928. All that is known about eyes, their structure and their maladies, he knew. He was the Dean of American Oculists. In 1931 Columbia awarded him an honorary degree. In his life he probably did more to prevent blindness than any other man who ever lived; and now that he has died his Knapp Memorial Foundation continues his research and teaching in ophthalmology under the guidance of his successors.

The amount of work done by Arnold Knapp was prodigious. He was director of a hospital for more than 30 years, Professor of Ophthalmology at Columbia for 25 years, Editor of the Archives of Ophthalmology (founded by his father the year Arnold was born) for 40 years. In the meantime he found time to conduct a large practice, to write more than 200 papers, to publish a classic book on Medical Ophthalmology, to indulge his interest in music, literature, and art, and to add to his remarkable collection of Chinese bronzes.

Knapp was the illustrious product of his time. He lived through the great physics discoveries of the latter nineteenth century. The work of Donders on refraction and of Roentgen on x-rays wheeled on the stage when he was very young, and he was thoroughly familiar with all that was going on in the laboratories in England, Germany, and America, and he knew personally most of the great scientists of the age. When experimental techniques and instruments have been refined to a certain point, a higher level of understanding is attained, and this is the point where it is vital to have men like Knapp, with the power to interpret new data and apply them so that the blind shall see and he that runs may read.

Christopher LaFarge

Christopher LaFarge prepared at Groton, and graduated from Harvard in 1920. He was as much of a misfit at Groton as Shelley was at Eton—but for a different reason. Shelley was persecuted by the boys because he would not conform to the local mores; whereas Kipper LaFarge was the victim of the official system, which was designed to turn out a species of Victorian aristocrat that Kipper could not be and didn't want to be. The enormous social pressures of the school left permanent scars on him; but, to be fair, it also taught him the difference between cricket and non-cricket, which is a handy thing to know.

When Shelley got to Oxford, he continued to have a ghastly time; but when Kipper came to Harvard, it was like being released from durance: nobody tried to make him over —indeed, it almost seemed as though nobody was aware of his matriculation. When he no longer had to struggle to be himself, he became more conventional and responsible, and he went from Harvard to the Pennsylvania School of Architecture, where he graduated in 1923.

He practised architecture in the City until 1932. He did this because he was full of art, and architecture was a medium of expression for him, and also because to follow the family calling was the obvious thing to do and he was still responsive to boarding-school pressures not to do anything bizarre; but he wanted to write, and he finally abandoned architecture happily and devoted himself wholly to writing. He had great facility with metre; and he published a novel in blank verse, Each to the Other, the main concern of which was to demonstrate the factors that contribute to a deeply successful marriage. For this he received the medal of the Royal Society of Literature. He also wrote some novels in prose, one of which, The Sudden Guest, sold more than half a million copies.

The commitment to purely creative writing was a perilous adventure. He drew to a predominant extent upon his personal and family experience, and there are limits to such a source. He lived in Saunderstown in the house where he was brought up, and his poems are of the salt sea air blowing over South County, of shooting over the Queen River Tract, of the 1938 hurricane, and of the local people of that part of Rhode Island. His works are works of art. He took himself seriously, and his ideas were the fruit of conception rather than of experience; and in his later years, when he had perfected his technique, it became increasingly difficult to know just where to apply it.

Men differ in the degree that they are conscious, some being aware of what is going on in the minds of men around them, and others going through life almost in a coma. It must be said of Kipper that he was fully conscious. When people loved him, he knew it; and when they were dull clods, he knew it. He responded to the sensitive like a violin, and the voices of nature spoke to him. He could be gay or earnest, affectionate or cold; and whatever he was it was he himself that one beheld, not through a glass darkly, but face to face.

Charles Downing Lay

Charley Lay graduated from the Columbia School of Architecture in 1900, and in 1902 from the Harvard School of Landscape Architecture. He was a landscape architect all his life, but he was also a remarkably good painter and etcher. He knew all about gardens, and wrote a book about them; and he laid out public parks and private estates, and made plans for the United States Housing Corporation and for the City of New York. He also founded, and for many years edited, the magazine Landscape Architecture.

Charley had an extremely good time doing all this. He was always full of ideas, and exceedingly practical. He had a studio out at Stratford, Connecticut, part of which he had built with his own hands. He never had much money and never needed much. He liked to grow things, and to see what he could do with growing plants; and he was very courageous about cutting down trees when they began to hide the view or darken the house. He had an easy-going manner, but he had a good, hard head, and knew very well what he was doing.

He organized the Housatonic Valley Association to try to preserve the natural beauty of the river valley, and he was tireless in working at it. In the Century he served on various committees, including the Board of Management. At one time he got together a "wine committee," of which the members self-sacrificingly spent a winter drinking wines so as to select the most appropriate for our cellar.

Charley was good company and very amusing—tolerant, bland, and entirely (and rather unexpectedly) aware of the ways of the world.

Charles Christian Lieb

Charles C. Lieb graduated from Columbia in 1902, and from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1906. Then he went to London and Utrecht for further study, and in 1909 he joined the faculty of P. and S. as an instructor. He retired in 1944 as Hosack Professor Emeritus after a lifetime of teaching. He really was a pharmacologist rather than a doctor; and he conducted important researches on the relation of potassium to the heart-beat that at one time required him to go to Holland for a year.

Charles Lieb was a highly civilized person, and so was his wife, who died only a year before him. They lived in the Dakota, on the west side of Central Park—a kind of mediaeval castle surviving from the days of Queen Victoria, where the ceilings go up to heaven and the vast windows reach to the floor. The Liebs liked living there; and they used to give musicales and similar dignified parties where everybody was polite and wore their best clothes.

The Liebs also kept a large house in Cornwall Bridge, Connecticut, where they dispensed a stately hospitality, supported various enlightened projects of the community, but chiefly cultivated a garden of lovely flowers that they gave away with a free hand. They used to play a quaint bridge in which a double was considered an unnecessarily definite opinion, and a slam bid rather aggressive; and, after playing a hand, a polite player would pass thereafter until all the other players had had a chance to play a hand also.

Their chauffeur, Barnes, who never spoke, drove the Lincoln limousine at exactly twenty-five miles an hour the ninety miles to New York and back.

There are not many people like this any more, and there seems to be no immediate prospect of a return to this conduct of life. When his wife died, Lieb was exceedingly distraught; and he never managed to adjust himself to the new circumstances. He was a friendly and kind man, who never did anything cheap or mean. He had a long, happy life that needs no justification by a lengthy catalogue of achievements.

James Gore King McClure

Jim McClure prepared at Lake Forest (Illinois) Academy, and graduated from Yale in 1906. In 1939 Yale gave him an honorary A.M. degree, and in 1941 Harvard did likewise. In 1942 the University of North Carolina gave him the LL.D.

After Jim left Yale, he set out to be a Presbyterian minister, and directed his formal education to that end; and in the course of a few years, he became pastor of a small church in Iron River, Michigan. After a little while, however, he had a bad nervous breakdown, and he had to go to the mountains of North Carolina to rest and recuperate. He lived outside of Asheville; and as he got better he began to look about him, and observe the people and their ways. They were good people, but poor beyond words because they lived in an area devoid of any opportunity for trade.

Jim's urge for the salvation of mankind turned to providing these mountaineer farmers with the means to save themselves. He organized a Farmers Federation in 1920, bought a small warehouse, and started to buy farm produce and sell farm necessities. There are now 23 warehouses serving 16 Blue Ridge counties in western North Carolina, and the work includes the development of trade in all kinds of things from tobacco to hook rugs. The farmers are richer than they were —and that is important—but even better, there is a spirit of enterprise and accomplishment abroad in the territory where before there was dull acceptance of a poverty so dire it broke men's spirit and condemned women to a life of endless, squalid labor.

Jim did all this; but he got a lot of help. He used to come to New York, and Philadelphia, and Detroit, and organize committees and raise money, and make speeches. Probably he was just as averse to asking for money as any of the rest of us, but he did it just the same; and the men and women he persuaded to go on his committees and help him did so because they liked him, and had confidence in him, and saw what he was doing was good.

And the mountain farmers bestowed on Jim a wholehearted confidence. All farmers, and those in remote districts particularly, are wary of strangers with new-fangled ideas; and a city man from the north was under every handicap in gaining the confidence of Buncombe County farmers. But the cheerful, humorous, human qualities that made Jim so agreeable to the highly educated people he grew up with, likewise recommended him to the mountaineers, and they took him to their hearts without reservation.

He was in his office in Asheville the day the Government closed all the banks. A very successful farmer who could not read or write came to see him.

"Mr. McClure, I hear the banks is all shut."

"Yes, that is true."

"Mr. McClure, ain't that goin' to be inconvenient?"

"That is putting it mildly."

"Where you goin' to get the pay-roll?"

"Well, at the moment, I don't know."

"Mr. McClure, would this help?" A large roll of bills came out of his pocket amounting to more than $1,000.

"It would help, but I don't think I ought to take your money. These are bad times."

"Mr. McClure, ain't I a friend of yurns?" . . .

When the books are opened at the Last Day, be sure that Jim McClure's name, like Abou Ben Adhem's, will lead all the rest, and for the same reason: he loved his fellow man.

Alfred McCormack

Alfred McCormack's forbears came from Ireland by way of New Orleans; but Alfred was born in Brooklyn, and graduated from the Boys' High School there in 1917. Although he had made the highest mark in the State in an examination for a Cornell scholarship, he entered Princeton that fall and graduated in 1921, Phi Beta Kappa. He taught school in California for a year, and then went to the Columbia Law School, where he was a Kent scholar and editor-in-chief of the Law Review. He was law clerk to Justice Stone for a year, and then in 1926, he entered the Cravath law office and became a partner there in 1935.

He was too young to get into the First World War; but in 1942 he was appointed special assistant to the Secretary of War, and was commissioned Colonel in the Military Intelligence Service. He worked at this for five years and was extraordinarily useful, and won the Distinguished Service Medal.

Alfred had a strong body and a most remarkably level head. The Cravath office, like the widow's cruse, is popularly supposed to provide never-failing opportunities for hard work on important matters; and Alfred applied himself with diligence and prospered exceedingly. He lived out at Greenwich, and when he was not employed in being a good lawyer he occupied himself with being a good gardener—a gentle pursuit that makes for contentment.

He was only fifty-four when he died—the same year, alas, he was elected to the Century; thus, many things are left undone to which he set his hand; but he never had to grow old. Singula de nobis anni praedantur euntes. The years as they pass plunder us of one thing after another.

Clarence Blair Mitchell

Clarence B. Mitchell was born in New York, and prepared for college at St. John's School. He graduated from Princeton in 1889, and from the Columbia Law School in 1891. He practised law in the City, and came eventually to be the senior partner in the firm of Choate, Laroque, and Mitchell.

He wrote several books, mostly connected with sport, including The A B C of Riding to Hounds and History of the Ivy Club. At one time he was president of the Union Club, and his tastes lay in that direction rather than in the Century, although he was a Centurion for 35 years.

Mitchell was an extremely pleasant and civilized person, but rather solitary. He used to lunch every day at the Down Town Association—usually by himself. He obviously knew everybody he wanted to know, and perhaps he was reluctant to risk being bored by effusive strangers. Nevertheless, if one had the courage to take the initiative, he was always friendly and responsive.

He lived to be ninety; and at the last came to have a somewhat gloomy view of the future of man—just like most of us who get to be ninety. The fact is, the world he knew and had fun in mostly went over the dam during the Second World War, and was succeeded by a period in which none of the old coinage seemed to be current.

A thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday: seeing that is past as a watch in the night.

Douglas Maxwell Moffat

Douglas Moffat graduated from Yale in 1903, Phi Beta Kappa. He was a scholar by talents and inclination, and fully expected to be a teacher. To this end, he took the A.M. in English at the Yale Graduate School; but, for some reason, the prospect was not pleasing, and he went off to the Harvard Law School and became a lawyer. In 1913, he was made a partner in the Cravath firm, and there he worked the rest of his life.

The general run of the men who were taken into the Cravath firm in those days devoted themselves by day and by night to the practice of corporation law—a form of specialized activity not particularly conducive to the development of amusing social behavior. But Douglas seemed to be miraculously immune to the spell. During the First World War, he was deputy alien property custodian in Manila, and in the Second, he was United States representative at the British-American Middle East Supply Centre in Egypt. For many years he was a vestryman of St. James's Church, and Secretary of the Standing Committee of the Diocese; and from 1948 to 1952 he was President of the Church Club. He did all these jobs (and a good many others) very satisfactorily, and, mirabile dictu, he practised law at the same time.

In 1956, he was appointed by President Eisenhower to be Ambassador to Australia; and he was out there on this commission when he died suddenly of an embolism.

Douglas was not only a very useful citizen; he was exceedingly good company. He had a dry wit and a scholarly approach to life that was refreshing. He was presiding at the annual dinner of the Church Club one year, and had recounted a large number of stories (a blessed relief at these affairs). After the dinner one of the local Ordinaries came over to him and said: "Douglas, some of those anecdotes you told were awfully funny. I could hardly keep from laughing!"

"Ah," replied Douglas, solemnly, "how can I thank you for lending dignity to our symposium."

George Walker Mullins

George W. Mullins graduated from the University of Arkansas, and went into teaching.

In 1912, at the advanced age of thirty-one, he came to Columbia as a prospective doctoral candidate in mathematics. Supporting himself by the familiar combination of tutoring and teaching—regular sessions, summer sessions, and evening sessions, he moved rapidly up the academic ladder. He received his Master's degree in 1913, and that same year was appointed an instructor in mathematics on the Barnard faculty, a teaching association which was to continue for thirty-five years. In 1917 he received his Ph.D., and in 1928 became a full professor; and shortly thereafter he was appointed executive officer of the Department of Mathematics at Barnard.

With the post of executive officer came a morsel of advice which included a commentary on the outcomes of higher education for women. As offered by his predecessor, P. N. Cole, to Mullins and by him established in the lore of the department for transmittal to subsequent executive officers, it was: "George, take the advice of an older man. Never appoint any women in your department. They never give you anything but trouble." (It may be noted that Cole himself practised the avoidance of feminine complications so assiduously that he lived out his quiet personal life in a furnished room not far from the University, under another name and the identity of a bookkeeper.)

In 1930, Mullins was appointed Acting Dean of Barnard College while Dean Virginia Gildersleeve was recuperating from a long illness. This appointment marked a shift from a teaching career of nearly thirty years duration, to an administrator's role, which he carried for the remainder of his life.

In 1935, Dr. Butler asked him to undertake the resuscitation of the College Entrance Examination Board. This agency, which Dr. Butler had, thirty-four years earlier, brought into existence by sheer force of will power, had fallen upon hard times. The educational revolution of the twenties and thirties, which had doubled the population and trebled the holding power of the American high schools, had forced the college preparatory curriculum out of its dominant position and completely discredited the Board, which was the sign and symbol of that curriculum.

Despite the personal setback of a severe thrombosis in 1935, Mullins reformed the examination program, recruited a small but highly competent professional staff, reorganized the moribund committee structure, and managed, within the space of a few years, to establish the Board as a modern and, what was more to the point, an accepted and respected part of the college entrance program.

The measure of his success is to be found in the fact that when the War broke out in 1941, the Board was the only one among the nation's testing organizations which was able to convert its operations to wartime requirements within a short period of time. Board personnel, expanded rapidly under pressure, Board tests, and Board skills were drawn upon heavily by the Armed Forces, and particularly the Navy, in the development of testing, selection, and assignment procedures.

Mullins was one of those rare individuals with great personal charm, exceptional administrative abilities, and gifts of foresight and human understanding who chose, throughout his life, to act as a catalytic agent rather than to seek personal advancement. His judgments as to people and institutions were skillful and accurate and, once made, represented a personal commitment for any action required of him.

For a man so articulate he spoke little of himself, so that the ordering of his personal enjoyments was a secret which he carried with him. Nevertheless, it is to be known that the friendships and comforts of the Century were at the top of his list and public recognition and honors for himself were at the foot.

Laurence Irving Neale

Laurence I. Neale was born in Boston, and graduated from Harvard in 1906. His father was an Englishman who came to America to practise the art of glassblowing; but his mother was a Massachusetts Yankee whose family had been Unitarians for generations. Thus Laurence was a Unitarian from his birth.

After he got out of Harvard, he went into building construction, and he became expert in the production and use of gypsum. This brought him eventually to New York, where Unitarians are rather scarcer than in Boston, and in 1923 he was elected to the Board of Trustees of All Souls Church. All this time, except for going to the First World War with the Rainbow Division, he was a bachelor involved with gypsum; but in 1930 he was married. In 1937 he became President of the Board of Trustees of All Souls, and in 1940, Dr. Minot Simons being ill, he became Acting Minister of the Church. Two years later he was elected Minister, and was ordained and installed by the Congregation. From that time he labored in that vineyard until he came to die.

It is astonishing that a man should spend thirty-five years in the gypsum business, and then in two years become the minister of an important church in the City. And, of course, it did not happen just that way. Neale had always been a thoughtful man interested in the relations of men with each other and in their relations with themselves. Babylonian myths and Pauline dogmas interested him only as curious manifestations of maladjustment. To him religion was a way of life where acts were more important than protestations, and where it was of supreme importance that each man should rely on his own self-respect as an incentive to virtue rather than on hopes for a prominent place in the heavenly chorus.

When one reads his sermons, the astonishing thing is not that this simple and sensible man eventually became a minister, but that he was able to endure the gypsum business for thirty-five years. And yet there may be an advantage in all this. For in business one has leisure to think about important things and come to conclusions about them, whereas the modern clergyman is expected to write articles for house organs, give radio talks, address Kiwanis clubs, and continually pursue vice, crime, and nonconformity with a great uproar, so that he really has no time to think about anything.

As his successor affectionately remarked: "The next life seems more homelike to us since he has gone there."

Sigourney Butler Olney

Sigourney B. Olney prepared at Pomfret and graduated from Harvard in 1910, and from the Harvard Law School in 1912. His family lived at Lawrence, Long Island, and he began practising law in Brooklyn. He never did get away from Brooklyn; but eventually became a senior partner in Cullen and Dykman, the leading law firm on Long Island.

In the First World War he went to the first Plattsburgh Camp, was commissioned an officer of field artillery, and fought in France with the 77th Division. In the Second World War he was instrumental in organizing the Fourth Infantry Regiment of the New York Guard, and commanded the First Battalion for five years, careless of the extraordinary inconvenience it cost him.

Sigourney was a consecrated vessel. If ever it became evident that a friend was in trouble, he went to his help; and, as with Heracles performing his labors, there was nothing that was too much trouble for him to undertake. His loyalty was that of an old Roman in the great days of the Republic, and his friends were grappled to him with hoops of steel.

He worked hard—too hard. To what he had to do he brought the utmost diligence; and his intense application left him little time and strength to look about him in the world or to consider what men are that God is mindful of them. He seemed unaware that he was living in an age of revolution, and he weighed the rightness of acts and events with the scales of laissez-faire. This impatience with the aims and operation of the welfare state was all part of his own self-reliance and the inheritance from a long line of sturdy New England ancestors.

In the present state of the world hearts of oak like Sigourney's no longer occur very often. Men are witty, or expedient, or they sell something. He was none of these. Imperturbable, he was the kind of man he wanted to be. He was the master of his fate; he was the captain of his soul.

Willard Dryden Paddock

Willard Paddock was a sculptor. He was born in Brooklyn and went to Pratt Institute, where he took courses in art. Later he studied in Paris and in Rome. After the First World War he received a great many commissions to create memorials; and he had exhibitions in galleries all over the country, including the Corcoran Gallery in Washington, the Carnegie Institute in Pittsburgh, and the National Academy of Design in New York. Among others, he sculptured the memorial fountains at Amherst College and at the General Hospital of Saginaw, Michigan.

Paddock studied anatomy along with art, and was convinced that a knowledge of it was essential for a sculptor. At Pratt Institute, beginning in 1927, he was a member of the faculty, and taught both these subjects.

He used to come to the Century on Saturday for lunch and forgather with Baird, Chambers, Dodd, and Tabor Sears; and they all had a pleasant time together for many years. He was a gentle soul, and rather shy. He lived in a small, old-fashioned house in Kent, Connecticut, up a side road, hidden in the woods. Here, after the death of his wife, he did all his own work until driven out by the winter cold, when he would go to live with his sister in Brooklyn.

He died at eighty-three. The days of our age are threescore years and ten; and though men be so strong that they come to four score years, yet is their strength then but labor and sorrow; so soon passeth it away, and we are gone.

Geoffrey Parsons

Geoffrey Parsons graduated from Columbia College in 1899 and from the Columbia Law School in 1903. He practised law for three years, and then gave it up for good and got a job as a reporter on the Evening Sun. He was exceedingly interested in politics, and by 1910 he was writing editorials for the Sun; but in 1918 he moved over to the Tribune as an editorial writer, and there he worked the rest of his life.

His training as a reporter made him shun isolated meditation, or the writing of impersonal essays. He became the the chief editorial writer for the Tribune, and from that rostrum he rescued the Republican party from its post-war miasmas and delivered it from the blight of the isolationists. He had a kind of innate subtlety that enabled him to get along with difficult people; and though he was on the side of the angels, the compromises he was compelled to accept sometimes seemed to put him rather far back from the wings. Nevertheless, he was always ready on the instant to defend his editorial writers. He was sure that the individual "is the center of effective journalism," and he deliberately refrained from tampering with the styles of his writers lest they should become molded into conformists without characters of their own. The job of an editor was not, he thought, the composition of belles-lettres; it was to stir the imagination of readers toward supporting a cause or toward forming a sensible and balanced judgment, and for this purpose an editorial must have the driving power of unstandardized individual thought.

Geoffrey's newspaper career spanned a half century that he called "perhaps the most harrowing man has ever faced." He wrote much of its history as a reporter. He interpreted and appraised it, as an editorial writer. And he helped shape it to the extent that what he wrote influenced his time. Withal, he made a great newspaper, and was a power in the land.

He was President of the Century; and while he was President, the Club had its centenary party, the like of which can scarcely be imagined by the midgets of these modern days. Before that, he was Secretary, and he had served on the Admissions Committee. In all these offices he was competent, and reliable, and extremely pleasant. He had a diffident approach, and contrived to give the impression that he really wanted an opinion or advice; but it shortly appeared that he knew a great deal more about the matter in hand than one had any reason to suppose at the outset.

About five years ago, he had a bad heart attack, and it left him very much impaired, so that life became increasingly burdensome and its possibilities straitened. He bore these ills with equanimity; and when his time was fulfilled, he journeyed to the undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveller returns, with a firm step and quiet mind.

Seth Low Pierrepont

Seth Low Pierrepont was born in Brooklyn, as his name implies. He prepared at Groton and graduated from Columbia in 1907. He went into the diplomatic service for a time, and served as third secretary of the American Embassy in Paris, and later as chargé d'affaires in Santiago, Chile; but he was not particularly interested in this, and did not go on with it.

He bought a beautiful house at Ridgefield, and established himself there for the rest of his life. From 1921 to 1927 he was Republican Representative in the Connecticut Legislature, and from that time he was one of the responsible leaders in the life of the town. He organized the country club, built the golf links, and was head of the Fairfield County Farm Bureau. He also eventually became Senior Warden of St. Stephen's Church, of which the Rector for many years was the late William B. Lusk.

Seth was a decent, honorable man, naturally and nurturally fitted to be the local squire of a New England town; and he filled this position admirably. He got involved with all kinds of good works, from the formation of the State Police to serving as trustee of Berea College; and he was successful in these enterprises because everybody had confidence in his integrity.

Charles Pratt

Charles Pratt was born in Brooklyn. He prepared at Westminster and graduated from Yale in 1916. A little later the War came, and he went to Washington to work for the War Trade Intelligence Bureau. He lived in New York, himself, but his family associations were in Brooklyn; and after the War he became connected with Pratt Institute, of which his father was then the head. When his father retired in 1937, Charlie became Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the school, and he continued in that post till a few years ago. Besides the Pratt Institute, he was director of The Brooklyn Hospital, and of the Brooklyn Savings Bank, and of the Brooklyn Public Library.

By vocation he was a private banker; but he had enough money, and so was able to give a good deal of attention to much more important matters—particularly education. He was extremely useful at Pratt Institute; and he led the school in its metamorphosis from a trade school to a degree-conferring institution of collegiate rank. During such periods of transition faculties are apt to be difficult—particularly for administrators who do not themselves hold advanced degrees or belong by right to the teaching guild. But Charlie was extraordinary with the faculty. He would listen with sympathy, deliberate with care; and, when it was necessary, say "No" with finality. And the faculty supported him through thick and thin.

In truth, it was impossible to quarrel with him. He was a fine-grained gentleman bred from the time he was a little boy in a tradition of frank and honorable conduct, and it was unthinkable to suspect him of ulterior motives or the oblique techniques made familiar in the world of public relations. With this patent honesty, he combined a gentle spirit and a kind heart, so that when he asked men to do anything they came to find they wanted to do the very thing he suggested. Thus, by simply being himself, the inborn grace of his spirit led him to the accomplishment of tasks that would have dismayed men of a more calculating disposition. He was honest, not because that is the best policy, but because that was the kind of man he wanted to be.

And so he was.

Thomas Alexander Cumming Rennie

Thomas A. C. Rennie was born in Scotland, and came to America with his parents as a small boy. He graduated from the University of Pittsburgh in 1924 and from the Harvard Medical School in 1928. He did teaching and research in psychiatry at the Universities of Pittsburgh and Michigan, and at the Veterans Administration Hospitals in the Bronx and at Montrose. At the time he died he was attending psychiatrist at New York Hospital.

He wrote a book, Studies in Urban Mental Health, and he continued to work on this theme all his life. Psychiatrists are popularly supposed to be a little mad; and perhaps this reputation recommends them to real lunatics, who suppose that, at last, someone will understand what is bothering them. There was, however, nothing morbid about Rennie. He was a scientific researcher who accepted all the facts that could be verified, whether they suited his current hypothesis or not. He was kind to patients, and quite firm when they tried to impress him with the uniqueness of their particular difficulty.

Rennie was rather frail physically. He was a first-class piano-player, and this talent was a source of constant refreshment to him. He had a little house at Washington, Connecticut, and he used to go out there, and look at the hills, and get rested. He was a fastidious and aristocratic person and sometimes gave the impression of being remote; but with those he knew well he was tender and affectionate and loyal. It is the nature of a Scot to be dour, and that is one reason we all like them.

Charles James Rhoads

Charles J. Rhoads graduated from Haverford in 1893, Phi Beta Kappa, and started to earn his living with the Girard Trust Company in Philadelphia. He was a Quaker and lived out on the Main Line in the Welsh district. He smilingly passed through life as a bank president, a private banker, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs (under President Hoover), a devoted member of the Board of Managers of Haverford College, and for twenty years Chairman of the Board of Trustees of Bryn Mawr College. He was also, of course, director of a lot of corporations in Philadelphia. When he died, he left to Bryn Mawr College the combined estate of himself and his wife, a bequest of $2,000,000.

Charley Rhoads had a good life doing all these things. When he was young, he played cricket on the Merion Club team (and a reliable player he was); and when he grew old, he was regarded as a sage, and people came to see him and to talk with him. The Main Line is a highly civilized community, and Quakers and Colleges are there regarded as important—as indeed they should be. The scores of Centurions whose daughters went to Bryn Mawr from 1936 to 1956 will remember that the President of the College and Charley Rhoads both signed all the degrees, so that he achieved a kind of immortality with the next generation.

He was a very wise person, courteous and tolerant, and, in the course of a long life, he dealt with all sorts and conditions of men, and eventually became a part of all that he had met—so that, like Ulysses, his experience was an arch wherethrough gleamed the untravelled world to which, at the last, he journeyed.

Cleveland Rodgers

Cleveland Rodgers was born in Greenville, South Carolina, and he never entirely lost the manners of a courteous southern gentleman. In 1906 he came to work for The Brooklyn Eagle, one of the great newspapers of the City, that a few years ago came to an untimely end under the importunate demands of its union employees. Rodgers served the Eagle as special writer, drama critic, associate editor, and editor. He left it in 1937 when Mayor LaGuardia appointed him one of the four original members of the City Planning Commission.

He was a Commissioner till he was dropped by Mayor Impelliteri in 1951, and after that he devoted his time to the Brooklyn Civic Center. He lived in Kew Gardens, and was Vice-Chairman of the Citizens Conference for International Union. The range of his interests was extraordinary. He wrote books about Walt Whitman, The Roosevelt Program, and several elaborate studies of planning and New York City.

The last book he wrote was called Robert Moses, Builder for Democracy, a history of highways, parks, bridges, tunnels, and housing, rather than a personality sketch. Rodgers had long worked very closely with Mr. Moses and contrived to get along amicably with him—which was regarded by cynics as somewhat miraculous. The truth is Rodgers was a gentle person, not given to self-advertisement or loud talk, and it was quite impossible to quarrel with him.

Edward Wales Root

Edward Root graduated from Hamilton in 1903, Phi Beta Kappa. His father was a Hamilton graduate before him; and his grandfather, Oren Root, was a professor of mathematics and mineralogy at the College for forty years. Edward went back to Hamilton in 1920, and established a course in the appreciation of art to show the visual problems of the artist; and from that time he made his home in his grandfather's house at Clinton, and lived there most of the time.

Edward had the misfortune to be deaf since he was a child, and he was afflicted with the overpowering reluctance, familiar to all the deaf, to get into conversations with strangers or to become involved in round-table discussions where several people speak at once. He was a sensitive and gentle person, and had a deep understanding of what a painter is trying to communicate in a picture, and his courses at Hamilton were entirely out of the ordinary. In 1952 Hamilton awarded him the degree of Doctor of Humane Letters.

He not only gave these courses at Hamilton, but, over the years, he collected some 130 paintings by modern British and American artists; and, a little while ago, he showed these at the Metropolitan Museum, to the great enthusiasm of the art critics, who were astonished at the high quality of the collection.

Since 1812 Hamilton has been a vital wellspring of culture and civilization in upstate New York—and not the only one. It is the absence of these superior colleges in the Deep South that is largely responsible for the hillbilly savagery that is tolerated there. And let it be said that Hamilton was indeed fortunate to have Edward Root spend twenty years of his life leading her students to an awareness of things above and beyond themselves.

Then the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy.

William Fletcher Russell

William F. Russell graduated from Cornell in 1910. He taught history and economics for a while, and then in 1914 he took the Ph.D. at Teachers College (Columbia). He entered the field of teacher-education; and in 1927 he succeeded his father as Dean of Teachers College (afterward the title was changed to President).

At Teachers College he established the Advanced School of Education, the Congress on Education for Democracy, and many other special projects. In his view, education embraced the processes or pressures by which not only the school, but also the home, the church, the market place, the playing field —indeed the whole gamut of community institutions—exert an influence on the beliefs and behavior of human beings. He realized, just as do the Jesuits, that an understanding of education would give control of powerful forces which might be directed to evil as well as to good ends. The profession of education, therefore, must be deeply concerned with the ultimate purposes of human life; and, whatever these may be, the great function of real education is to protect people from indoctrination. In this he differed from the Communists, from the publicity agents of Madison Avenue, from the denizens of the Mississippi Valley, and from all that great ruck of men who keep trying to make us over in their own image.

This capacity to keep on thinking, indifferent to threats and favors alike, is, of course, what education is all about. To refuse to accede to the ukase of the Supreme Court, of the Archbishop, or of the manager of a large dairy company, takes a high order of man, a superior person; and there is no technique of education that will inevitably result in equipping men and women with the requisite courage and character. But Russell kept right on trying for it. He devised methods of study more precisely designed to solve the problems involved in the theory and practice of education; and under his leadership Teachers College became the largest and, by any reasonable test, the most influential school of education in the world. This happened because he was acutely concerned that its influence should be good rather than that it should be powerful.

The aims of life change. Sometimes it is the pyramid that is all-engrossing, sometimes salvation by faith, sometimes the conquest of a continent; but tolerance and skepticism, the ability to see life steadily and see it whole, are the coin that is current in any dispensation.

Russell was not only a man of understanding: like Abou Ben Adhem, he loved his fellow-men. During the Second World War, many hospitals sent out pleas for help. Although he was then in the midst of one of his most trying periods at the College, Will Russell promptly volunteered. Night after night, he went to the hospital to do the most menial chores and to help in the care of the ill. His rare devotion was promptly recognized by nurses and physicians, who knew him only as Will, the new orderly. He was soon assigned to the most desperate cases, whose care was exhausting even to the veteran nurse. To these patients, Will, the orderly, devoted himself with deep sympathy, understanding, and subtle skill, sometimes with motherly gentleness, sometimes with fatherly prodding of hope and pride.

After some weeks, one of the chief physicians who had observed Will's work said: "Will, you are the best orderly I've ever seen in my life. If you want to make it your career, and I hope you do, I will see that you have the best opportunities there are."

Nathan Ayer Smyth

Nathan Smyth graduated from Yale in 1897, Phi Beta Kappa, and from the Yale Law School in 1900. He was a lawyer in the City, but he was all his life exceedingly involved with collateral matters and interests. After the First World War he organized the cooperative bureaus to find employment for returning soldiers, and a year later he served as assistant to the Secretary of Labor.

In 1921 he became assistant general counsel to the Shipping Board, and in 1922 general counsel to the Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, where he was in charge of vast numbers of claims against Government-owned vessels. Wherever there was trouble, Nate Smyth always seemed to turn up working to straighten it out and to get justice for people who were being squeezed. He was a kind and gentle person, and very unexpectedly competent; and his services to the Legal Aid Society and the Charity Organization Society were beyond price.

Nate's father was a clergyman in New Haven, and possibly this bred in him an interest in theology. At any rate, he wrote Through Science to God, a theological work, and, some years later, a study of the drift toward totalitarianism entitled Lest Freedom Fail. These are thoughtful books and very much in step with the time, the astonishing products of a Wall Street lawyer. When the Spence School was reorganized with a board of trustees about 25 years ago, Nate practically held it on his knee until it got going.

He used to lunch every day at the Down Town Association, where he had some cronies who used to talk and laugh together and have a pleasant release from toil and tribulation. He was a small man, with a friendly expression, and shy folks used to come up and speak to him; and even when he was alone, he never seemed lonely. It is impossible that anyone was ever mean to him. He had an aura that induced courtesy in quite horrible people, and as he walked to and fro on the earth everybody was glad that he was nearby.

Stephen Seymour Thomas

Seymour Thomas was born in Texas in 1868, and got most of his formal education at the Art Students League and the Académie Julien in Paris, where he came to be a pupil of Jules Lefebvre. He also studied under Benjamin Constant.

He was a portrait painter, and a very good one. He painted the portraits of Woodrow Wilson which hang in the White House and in the State House at Trenton, of Lord Bryce in the National Liberal Club in London, of Francis Lynde Stetson in the Bar Association in New York, and two score portraits of other distinguished men and women. In his heyday he was the most sought-after portrait painter in America.

He was elected to the Century in 1915, but about that time he took up permanent residence in California, so he never became a familiar figure in the Club. He was small in stature and precise in speech, with an orderly mind and pleasant, friendly manners. He was Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, and in 1914 Williams gave him an honorary degree.

He spent his life doing what he wanted most to do; and he did it so well as to excite the admiration of people he cared about. This is truly a happy dispensation.

Vanderbilt Webb

Vanderbilt Webb prepared at Groton, and graduated from Yale in 1913. Three years later he graduated from the Harvard Law School and went into the Root, Clark and Buckner law office. After a time, he made a firm with Robert P. Patterson and Morris Hadley, and they practised law very happily together for some years, until Patterson went on the Bench and the other partners joined the Milbank-Tweed firm.

Webb lived up the River, at Garrison. He was a Democrat, and used to devote considerable time and effort to making things difficult for the Republicans in that part of the world; and though he made life rugged, neither he nor any other Democrat could get elected to office in Putnam County. Franklin Roosevelt, when he was Governor, appointed him a member of the Taconic State Park Commission. He served as Commissioner for twenty years, and was much interested in it and very useful. Then Roosevelt became President, and wanted Webb to appoint as a paid employee of the Commission some politician who was to spend all his time working for the President. Webb flatly refused to do this; and so, when his term expired, he was not reappointed.

This recalcitrance of Webb's was entirely characteristic of him. He could not be cajoled or threatened into any course that involved some sly obliquity simply because it was expedient. He was stubborn in doing what he thought was right, and outspoken in differing from the majority—which was fairly often.

He was very valuable to the community in a variety of consecrated jobs. For many years he was Chairman of the Board of Trustees of Groton; he was a trustee of the Metropolitan Museum, and of Colonial Williamsburg; and he had served as Chairman of the Yale Alumni Fund Committee.

Webb was a tall, lean man—rather unexpectedly powerful. He had gleaming black eyes and black hair, but as soon as he began to speak he was obviously a Yankee. He was exciting to talk with. His opinions were positive and often surprising, and he had no hesitation in expressing them. He was completely devoid of cant or posing, and he got to the meat of the subject with directness and rapidity. He was scornful of hypocrites and hypochondriacs; but if any friend was in trouble, Van never failed him.

It is hard to be reconciled that he, so gay, so vital, so useful, should have died so young. He was cut off out of the land of the living, and there just is no one like him left in the world.

Stanley Went

Stanley Went was born in England, and educated at Wyggeston Grammar School, Leicester, of which his father was the Headmaster. He taught Latin in this school for a short time, and then went as Exhibitioner to St. John's College, Oxford. He graduated in 1905 (Second in Greats).

After a little while he came to America, and became managing editor of Bellman in Minneapolis, and thence to New York as a free-lance editorial writer for the Evening Post and the Sun. When the First World War came along, he returned to England and was commissioned in the Leicestershire Regiment.

He came back to New York after the War, and resumed newspaper work, eventually joining one of the Rockefeller Research Organizations as Editorial Secretary. This involved travelling through the Far East to coordinate missionaries' reports and find out what they were doing.

In 1934 he returned to England, and joined the editorial staff of Putnam & Co. Ltd., with special responsibility as the representative of G. P. Putnam's Sons. He was a director of the London firm till his death.

He was elected to the Century in 1921, when he was forty years old, and he was one of a group of younger men who sat at the feet of Mr. Henry Holt. After the War, he came over only twice; but he had a good time on each sojourn, though he was busy with Philistine book-publishers—who were good company all the same.

In London he inhabited the Devonshire Club, whose famous port trapped many an unsuspecting publisher from overseas. When he could get away, he played golf—very good golf, too. He had a genius for making friends; and visitors from Putnam's to London always looked him up with lively anticipations that were never disappointed. He was very popular, not only with the people he worked with but in the whole book business; and he was good at his task, and happy doing it.

Post Wheeler

Post Wheeler graduated from Princeton in 1891, and took a Doctor of Letters degree there in 1893. He studied medicine at the University of Pennsylvania for a year, and then attended the Sorbonne until 1895. He returned to New York, and for five years was editor of the Press; but he was not much interested in this, and in 1906, by order of President Theodore Roosevelt, he became the nation's first career diplomat.

He started this public service as Second Secretary to the American Embassy at Tokyo, and later he was stationed at St. Petersburg, and at Rome. He became Counsellor to the Embassy at Stockholm, and at London, and at Rio de Janeiro, and when he retired in 1934 he was Minister to Albania. All told, he spent twenty-nine years in the Foreign Service.

Wheeler liked this life very much. He had time to write books about what he saw and the thoughts that occurred to him; and these writings reflect the mind and point of view of a sophisticated philosopher who was at the same time a simple and understanding person. As he went from place to place, he accumulated decorations conferred by governments of Europe, and South America, and Japan, and these are testimonials to the friendly respect in which he was universally held.

He was only sixty-five when he retired; but he lived to be eighty-seven, and was writing books and articles to the end. It takes talent to grow old gracefully, and this he accomplished with success and with satisfaction to himself and his friends.

Lawrence Grant White

Lawrence G. White graduated from Harvard, cum laude, in 1907, and then went to Paris to the Beaux Arts, where he received a diploma in 1913; and he also studied for several years at the American Academy in Rome. He was an architect, and in time he became the senior partner in McKim, Mead and White. In both the World Wars he served as an officer of the Navy.

If there is anything that Larry White was not interested in, it is simply because the limits of human capacity stop short of omniscience. He painted, he wrote charming verse, he knew his classic and modern languages and put Dante's Inferno into English blank verse (a task that occupied him for twenty-five years), he was poignantly aware of the niceties of food and drink, he was a cultivated gentleman, and he was a superlatively good architect.

In the Club, three years after he became a member he was elected to the Board of Management and served on the House Committee, twice as Chairman. He used to order the dinners for the Board meetings, and they were a source of astonishment and delight. At the time of his death he was First Vice-President. In 1950 he won the Art Committee Medal for a water color adjudged to be the best painting in the Autumn Amateur Show.

It was primarily as an architect that he thought of himself, however, and he brought to the practice of that profession an imagination and exuberance tangibly recorded in the Regimental Barracks on Governor's Island, the Hotel National in Havana, the Girard Trust Company Offices in Philadelphia, and a score of other monuments to his talents. He impressed one as being a simple and rather innocent person; but he was thoroughly versed in the ways of the world and the difficult problem presented in getting and keeping the confidence of those curious men who come to sit on the boards of hospitals, universities, banks, and similar institutions that employ architects in great enterprises. When he won the competition for the Harvard Business School, he drew a picture of the School from a point in the sky; and when Mr. Baker (who was a thousand times more sophisticated than the usual donor) saw it, he was from that moment pleased and excited beyond measure. But when Larry sat down to figure out the earthy details, he found he had to transpose the dormitories and lecture halls and to turn the open courts to the south if the New England snow was to be got out of them before May.

He was never abashed by these incidents. He was always willing to admit he was wrong (when he was), and he took it all with a disarming smile. It was great fun to talk with him of something that he knew very little about, for he was full of ideas, and one could see his mind working with a complete lack of self-consciousness—now going here and now there. He kept this buoyant, uninhibited way of living and expressing himself right to the end of his life, and it made him exciting to have around and to associate with. He was filled with a divine ferment that seemed to effervesce in enthusiasm.

He did not come out of the west, like young Lochinvar, nor out of Italy, like Leonardo da Vinci; but he combined the qualities of these heroes in himself so that his life was gay, and joyful, and useful.

Stanley Williams graduated from Yale in 1911, and then studied for a year at the Sorbonne. In 1915 he received a Ph.D. from Yale, and was appointed to the faculty as Instructor in English. Eventually he became Sterling Professor of American Literature.

Williams invented the field of American Literature at Yale. When he first began teaching, there was no formal course in American writing; but he shortly organized one, and it became very popular and important. He was, himself, an authority on Washington Irving and the author of a biography of him, and, in the course of time, he also wrote other books about American poetry and prose and their relation to English literature and Spanish. He had the satisfaction of seeing the literature of our country raised to academic respectability, and of knowing that his own studies and teaching were a major factor in the elevation.

He was a delightful man who enjoyed his life, whether in the library or classroom or on the tennis court, whether dining with friends or at home, whether painting his barn at South Dennis, or while, as he wrote to a friend not long before his death, his

> "children's children sat on his knee and heard his great watch tick."

He was humorous, rather than witty, quick to perceive, but charitable; a generous man to his students, a very good companion. People spoke his name with affection, and when he appeared—a handsome, large, slow-moving man—their faces lighted up.

One of his happiest experiences was in connection with the founding of the Breadloaf School of English. He had suggested the idea and was a member of its first faculty. Twenty-five years later (in 1944) he wrote to a friend: "I appeared at Middlebury in that first summer laden with baby-carriages, tennis rackets, and notes for two courses: one in Shakespeare and one in Nineteenth Century prose. My classroom was an ancient bowling alley. . . . We were a small but a devoted band; and during the six weeks I had experiences so varied as the teaching of King Lear, of Newman's Apologia, of listening to the poetry of Hilda Conkling—and I almost lost my job for this: in catching many a good trout from the river. Even in that first summer there was tennis, fishing and hikes on the trail. To the present staff the methods of teaching and the subjects taught would, I am afraid, seem paleolithic, but we laid the foundation for a good life which I shall always associate with Breadloaf."

He was a good tennis-player, and once remarked of himself that he had "a chop shot that hit the ground like a piece of swill." Pierson, in his recent book about Yale, described Williams as "a gentle, slow-speaking, sad-eyed humorist." Williams himself complained that "students these days are all so serious-minded."

He was a delightful person: a first-class scholar who never took himself too seriously.

Alexander Clinton Zabriskie

Alexander C. Zabriskie prepared at Groton and graduated from Princeton in 1920. He studied later at Trinity College, Cambridge, and graduated from Virginia Theological Seminary in 1924. His father was George Zabriskie, who was long Chancellor of the Episcopal Diocese of New York; and Alexander was born in his father's house in Gramercy Park in the shadow of Calvary Church.

He was ordained a priest; but he was more interested in teaching and research than in parish work, and so he became an instructor on the seminary staff in 1925, and dean in 1940. He had to retire from the deanship in 1950 because of ill health, and since then had been Professor of Church History. He wrote Arthur Selden Lloyd, Pastor and Missionary Statesman and Charles Henry Brent, Crusader for Christian Unity. He had a great admiration for these two Bishops, and so has everybody that ever knew them. Perhaps his selection of them as the subjects for his biographies throws a clearer light on the manner of man he was himself than anything that can merely be said about him.

Undoubtedly he was influenced to go to Princeton, and later to Trinity College, by Mr. Peabody, the Headmaster of Groton. The Rector was eternally frustrated that so many of his boys went to Harvard or Yale for no adequate reason, and delighted when a good one broke loose and went somewhere else. He also remarked, on occasion, that he would rather have one of his graduates a clergyman than president: a wish that was not generally shared by the Product.

Anyway, Zabriskie went into the ministry, and had a happy life of it. From time to time he went on circuit, and preached sermons, and renewed his contacts with the world of sinners; and then he would come back to Alexandria and restore his energies at the Pierian Spring. He had three sons, all of whom likewise became clergymen.

He was only fifty-eight when he died—a simple, decent man doing his duty in that state of life unto which it had pleased God to call him.
